We are glad to see that the "dressing" we lately gave the irrrepressible Mr. Allen has noticeably contributed to that eccentric gentleman's happiness by indiet our readers on matters which are so purely personal to himself and his contractor proteges, we must take leave once for all to undeceive him. When we better use for our space we may again refer to him, but we have too much regard for the intelligence and the patience of our readers than to inflict upon them continuous reference to a controversy which has not the slightest public interest except to stir the curiosity which may be amused by the gyrations of a politico-literary tumbler. To change the figure, having administered in several doses the "moral tonic" for the Cabinet in its last hours, just in tune which our intermittent patient once and to incur the guilt of consent to the great again expressed a preference, and; which misdeed.
