RE-COUNTING THE BALLOTS.

..........

nistration.

The re-counting of the ballots in several instances since the day of polling has not been such as to command respect or give satisfaction. We know how difficult it must be to please all in a matter like this when any decision must ensue in disappointment to one of the contending parties. But when the decision is a fair one it is possible for even the defeated party to accept the inevitable, and t grin and bear the consequences. It is not so easy to do this, however, where fair play is ignored in the re-count of the We say nothing on the meritof the St. John case, in which the Judge have given stability to the movement by refused to re-count the ballots on some | complying with its requirements. The technical quibble, that the usual fee had deposited personally Veber, but by some else on his behalf. With such narrow majority as that by which ex-Governor Tilley won the seat, we can hardly think that a man of such presumably sensitive honour could sit in Parliament with any comfort so long as such : suspleion overhoughts title to it. A count even to him one would think would be more satisfactory. If it established his election he would be the better pleased and the more respected, while if it proved that he had not votes enough to elect him he could, of course, not think of usurping a place which rightfully elonged to another. We say, then, evelfrom Mr. Tilley's point of view, it were much better had a recount taken place. although it is quite possible the ex-Governor may entertain quite a different view. In the case of Montreal Centre also a recount was declined, but as Mc Ryan's majority was much more pronounced than Tilley's, there is not the same auspicion of injustice nor sense hardship in the case. The worst case of the kind which has no far come to light. however, is that of East Hastings, where Mr. Aylesworth beat Mr. White by a larger majority than Tilley's over De Veber. A recount was demanded and granted. and by the most curiously one-sided process the Deputy County Judge there converted the majority of 12 for Mr. Aylesworth into one of 21 for Mr. White. The queer feature of the business is that 'His Honour' cancelled ballots which were-to him-objectionably marked in favour of Mr. Aylesworth while he at the same time declined to reject papers himilarly marked for Mr. White from an other section. To expect Mr. White to take the seat thus proffered him were surely too much to expect of the self-respect of any man of honour. Yet they do Guetig, nephew of the proprietor of the say that he will take it and be glad, on the score that 'all is fair in war.' # EARLY CLOSING.

Conservative Ministry

To the Editor of the British Whig. SIR,-Many who have the interest heart of those who compose the bulk the mercantile classes, have watched with pleasure the steady growth among employers of a desire to shorten the hours of service in their establishments, to the greatest extent allowed by requirements of their customers. In this they have been ably sustained by the public, which has goodnaturedly accepted the restrictions thus placed upon free trade, and benefits to those most concerned, viz. the employer and the employee, need not be enumerated, as the experience of many years in some branches of trade has answered any objections which have been made against 'early closing,' and that is of greater value than the testimotty of those who have given the short and long hour system a fair trial is conclusively in its favor. This need not be wondered at, for it is quite impossible, except in rare cases, to preserve the same degree of energy, and consequently to render as efficient service if kept on in the 'ragged edge,' from early morning until late at night, is, if only a reasonable day's work were demanded. Our most intelligent business men recognize this as a money-making fact, and arrange their business habits with due regard to it. Kingstor has taken a creshtable share in the good movement, and many of her young men, instead of taking put existence in a state of semi-slavery, are permitted by its agency to enjoy themselves as they ought, and have leisure to devote the winter evenings to self-improvement. There is, however, much yet to be done. Many of our young men are calling foudly for deleverance from long hours. In other cities of Ontario the Y.M.C. Association have taken an active part in shaping public opinion in favour of the aims of various local Early Closing Associations, with much success, and many people here are asking if this good work has been accomplished so largely by their assistance in other places, why not in Kingston | The Association has been organized specially to benefit and improve the condition young men, and as far as they can legitimately assume this within their influence and power, it will be accepted by the citizens as a proof of their sincere desire to make every improvement possible in their condition. (Gazette.) The Indians at Caughnawaga are making great preparations for the great canoe races which are to come off just before the big event. There will be half a dozen canoes in the first race, which will come off at three o'clock. These canoes will be manned by about twenty four or thirty Indians, according to capacity, and it will be surprising to see double banks of oars strike the water at the rate of fifty to sixty strokes per minute. The second race will be the squaws' race, for which some five or six smaller canoes, manned by squaws, are entered. Following these will come the great event, and many anxious eyes will scan the horizon on that eventful morning. On this point none are more auxious than the scutters themselves, and Mr. Courtney playfully asked the writer if he could not "order a day like this for the race on Wednesday." People are prone to speak, and believe the very worst of others, and this is so in the church, as much if not more than outside I think it is more noticeable in the East and in New England," On the financial question Mr. Beecher said he was a hard-money-man to the backbone. He said his western tour of three months, losing this week, had been very satisfactory. He had travelled eleven thousand miles, lectured every night, and did not miss one engagement. He did not feel fatigued. He had plenty of red blood in him, and could stand hard work.
