Mr. Froud, in an article on "Science and Theology, Ancient and Modern, which appears in the current number of the International Review, rums up his hopes for the future of religion in the following words :-- "Man's nature is the same as it always was. Science has much to teach us, but its message is not the last nor the highest. If we may infer the future from the past, a time will come when we shall cease to te dazzled with the thing which we call progress, when increasing wealth will cease to satisfynay, may be found incapable of being produced or preserved except when relegated to a secondary place-when the illusions which have strangled religion shall be burnt away, and the immortal part of it restored to its rightful sovereignty, a long-weary read may be before us. Not easily will an inviolable atmoaphere of reverence form again around spiritual faith to warn off the insolent intruder. Piety, reverence, humble adoration of the great Maker of the world are in themselves so beautiful that religious faith might have remained forever behind that enchanted shield, if imaginative devotion could have kept within bounds its wild demands upon reason. Not till Catholics had piled superstition Street. elaborated a speculative theology which conscience as well as intellect at length flung from it as incredible, did the angels which guarded the shrine fold their wings and fly. The Garden of Eden is desecrated, not by the trampling of controversy, and no irgenious reconciliations of religion and science, no rivers of caustic holy water, can restore the ruined loveliness of traditionary faith. But the truth which is in religion will assert itself again as it asserted itself before. A society without God in the heart of it is not permitted to exist; and when once more a spiritual creed has established itself which men can act on in their lives, and believe with their whole souls, it is to be hoped that they will have grown wiser by experience, and will not again leave the most precions of their possessions to be ruined by the extravagance of an exag. THE OLD RELIABLE LINE! gerating credulity.

THE PAIN-KILLER.-We have long known the high character of this medicine, and that it is used with great suc ceas and satisfaction in our very best families. It is the favorite medicine of our missionaries in heathen lands, where the use it more than all else together for the diseases that abound in those warm Oswego, Cleveland, Toledo, Detroit, climates. It should be kept in every house, and be in readiness for sudden at tacks of sickness. - Christian Press.
