This was a strange assertion; strange n being a flat contradiction of a fact-or, otherwise, a theory-recorded in detail n the history of American literature. The author of the assertion was a wellknown member of San Francisco's ad vanced and inveterate Bohemia; a gentleman who has long since retired from the he brought home wife No. 2, who it is active pursuits of his profession, and spends his days in dreamy meditationfrequenting one of the popular resorts of the craft, but mingling little in the idle babble of the throng. When drawn into conversation, it is generally to correct some error from his inexhaustible mine of reminiscence, and on such eccasions his words are few and precise. 'Then you know something of the poet and his history, doctor?" 'With a few others, I was one of his ntimate associates for years. Much that has been written of him, and regarding house, and as soon as they reached the his death, is false. Poe was not what is called a periodical drunkard, holding himself to spells of sobriety and then giving way to violent bonts of intemperance; and told the man what they had seen but he was a steady drinker, and when is means permitted he would drink to excess. His habitual resort in Baltimore was the Widow Meagher's place. This was an oyster s and and liquor-bar on the city front, corresponding in some respects with the coffee-shops in San Francisco. It was frequented much by the printers and men engaged in the shipping offices, and ranked as a respectable place, where parties could read the papers, enjoy a game of cards, or engage in social cenversation. Poe was a great favorite with the old woman. You would always see him sitting just behind the oyster-stand, and about as quiet and sociable as an oyeter himself. He went by the name of the WM. L. WEBBER, Land Commission'r Bard, and when parties came into the shop, it was 'Bard, come up and take a nip'; or, 'Bard, take a hand in this game.' He was a sort of pensioner on his acquaintances, as far as drinks were concerned. Whenever the old woman met spread violation of this rule has lately been discovered. For a number of weeks eight or ten students of both sexes have been holding clandestine meetings. On a stormy night they made their es-cape from their rooms, some by the back stairs, others by the convenient rooms of the summer kitchen, and others still by knotting together several sheets, the rope thus made being securely fastened to the furniture and affording a risky but certain means of reaching the ground.

Among those who thus violated the rules were two pretty girls, one from Michigan, aged 22, and the other from the city of Mansfield, not yet out of her teens. Each of these girls had two devoted admirers and carried on double courtthe remainder of the night. A wide-

The morning after one of these meetings one of these young women began to reflect upon the possible consequences and confessed. The result was an immediate meeting of the Faculty and prompt expulsion of the offending students. Six were expelled at once and investigations are progressing that will probably result in the expulsion of others. One profestor says that he would rather have all the buildings burn to the ground than have such a thing happen. It was a blot upon Oberlin, an injury to the college and a blow at the co-education of the

A Remarkable Story.

According to the Elizabeth, N. J. Herald, it seems that about three years ago a young man living in Summit got married, and in due time his wife gave birth to a child, which was a girl. When the child was about one year old its mother died. About five months later the young widower became lonely, and before doing so, he took all his first wife's clothing, packed them into a trunk and locked it up, and allowed no one to to have charge of the key but himself. Among the clothing put away was her wedding shawl and a pillow his wife had made for her first born, and some toys she bought just before she died. Then said made as good a mother as the average stepmothers do. Things went on lively till one night last week, when there was a party at the next neighbor's house. So after putting the babe in its little bed, the father and mother N - 2 went over to spend the evening at the party. Shortly after they left, two men came along on their way to the party also. They saw a wonderful light in the house as though it might be on fire. They also heard the cries of the babe as though in great pain. They went to the door the light went out, and all was as silent as the grave without. They hastened on to the house were the party was and heard in his house as they came by. Five or six men, including the owner of the house, started to investigate the report. When they arrived they found every door and window fast as they were when the owner left. On going inside everything was found to be in its place except the child, which, after a long search, was found up stairs under the bed on which its mother died, covered up with its mother's shawl, and its little head resting on the pillow its mother made for is, sound asleep. Alongside of is lay its little playthings.
