have succeeded in smuggling their revolutionary papers into a political prison at Odessa, where three hundred of their friends are confined. A Government official was recently travelling from St. Peteraburg to that city, where he was to take part in a criminal process instituted against certain Nihilists. He received a warning from a revolutionary tribunal sentinel as you please, for you shall fill not to meddle in the affair, but, not heeding this advice, proceeded on his journey. Arriving at Odessa, he could not find his trunk, which was somehow missing from the luggage waggon. After some delay, however, it was found. It had been opened, and although none of its marketable contents had been abe stracted, the papers relating to the pending trial had disappeared. In their place the procurer found a letter from the Secret Government, blaming him for having neglected their well meant caution, and informing him that as his condust had not been in any other respect But he went out busy and happy with reprehensible, the executive committee contented itself with depriving him of the papers connected with the trial in which he was engaged. The new chief of the gendarmerie, General Drenteln, has entered upon his duties at St. Petersburg, but his head cannot rest easy on his shoulders. He has already received notices from the Nihilists that it will be well for him to prepare for death. When he appears in the streets

She saw clearly snough that the steel

Was as one of doubtful reputation, or concerning which he knows nothing. We are led to make those remarks owing to the course always pursued by those who have used that celebrated and valuable horse medicine knows as "Durley's Condition Powers always one by nature."

You did not have to turn artist; you were always one by nature.

She saw clearly snough that the steel

Was still in this man's soul. She had placed it there, and she resolved to pluck it out at once.
