A MUSICAL LOVE STORY.

BY THE VOX HUMANA POEM MACHINE, WITH PUN ATTACHMENT.

A young man loved Miss Clari Nett,
He flute to meet her everywhere,
To him she was a cymbal true
Of everything that's pure and fair.

One day, he called Miss Clari-on,
And spake his love, and would have sworn it
But harsh she answered, 'Fie, for shame!'
Your love! Young! man I ruthless cornet.'

This hurt his feelings very much,
Bas(e) soon and low he did become,
Grew violin in taste and company,
Took horns of nasty gin and drum.

He went with every rov'string-band,'
Till he had not a nickel, oh!
And then he thought with deep remorse,
'Now, here's a pretty piccolo.'

'No more will I C clarinet,
A serpent (base) is she, I know;
I'd held the tenor of my way
If her tones had not moved me so.'

Accordingly he swiftly went,
His mournful history to close;
ophicleide steamer he did jump,
And stopped the Bourdon of his woes.

MR. TALMAGE'S SEVENTH SERMON ON "THE NIGHT SIDE OF CITY LIFE."

New York, Nov. 24.—The Brooklyn Tabernacle was this morning crowded to its utmost capacity to hear the Rev. Mr. Talmage preach the seventh of his series of sermons on the "Night Side of City Life." The subject this morning was "Among Thieves and Assassins." The church has a vast audience room, said to be capable of seating 6,000 people. The corridors and aisles were filled, and many were turned away, unable to gain admission. The reverend gentleman is evidently the sensation of the hour. At the opening of the services the whole congregation rose and sang the long metre doxology, Mr. Arbuckle, the cornet precentor, leading, and Mr. George W. Morgan presiding at the organ. This was followed by an invocation and a reading of the Scriptures by Mr. Talmage. The congregation, led by Arbuckle's silver notes, then sang the opening hymn, "Stand up for Jesus." Mr. Talmage held the close attention of the immense audience throughout his discourse, and at times the feeling was intense.

Luke x., 30: "A certain man went down from Jerusalem to Jericho and fell among thieves, which stripped him of his raiment and wounded him; and departed, leaving him half-dead."

This attack of highwaymen was in a rocky ravine where robbers have a first-rate chance. In 1820 an English traveler was on the same road shot and robbed. The wayfarer of the text not only lost his money and apparel, but nearly lost his life. His assailants were not only thieves but assassins. I have spoken to you of the night of pauperism, the night of debauchery and shame, the night of official neglect and bribery; I tell you now of the night of theft, of burglary, the night of pistol and dirk and bludgeon the night of assassination. The scene on the lonely road of the text is repeated every night in our cities, where men are robbed, wounded, and left half-dead. I said to the prominent official, "Give me for the night two stout detectives, and men who not only are muscular, but lock muscular." I said, as we put out for our midnight exploration, "Have you both loaded pistols?" and they brought them out, together with their clubs, and showed me that they were ready for anything. "Show me crime," I said, "the worst, the most villainous, and the most violent; I want to know who are the worst people in these cities to be evangelized." I wanted no one along but officers of the law that night, for I never want any one to run risks on my account: and determined I was that, having undertaken for Christian purposes to show up the lower depths, I would stop for nothing. I was advised by one of the officers to disguise myself lest I be set upon by some desperado, but I said 'No, I will take the risks. Be having I am doing christian work, I will go as I am.' And so I went.

Why did you not first look up the criminal classes of Brooklyn? It was not for lack of material. Last year in Brooklyn there were 28,857 arrests, 200 burglaries, 12 homicides, 27 highway robberies, over 43,000 lodgers in the station-house, 336 scoundrels photographed for the rogues gallery without any expense to those who had their pictures taken, and over $200,000 of property stolen, and all kinds of crime, from manslaughter to chicken theft.

A DEN OF THIEVES.

What is this glazed window, and what is this mysterious going in and out of men who hardly look up? It is what the Bible calls a den of thieves. They would not admit it. The place could not be proved to be such, for the keeper and the patrons are the acutest men in the city. No sign of stolen goods, no public talk about misdemeanors, but, at this table two or three men are whispering. Before them is a glass of beer or stronger intoxicant, but they will not drink to unconsciousness. They will take just enough to excite their courage and bring them to the point of the reckless; but they want their hand steady and their eye clear. They are talking over last night—their narrow escape at the basement door, how nearly they fell from the window-ledge, how the bullet grazed their hair. What is that bandaged hand? It was cut by a window glass while the burglar was feeling the way to the inside fastening. How did that man lose his eye? Three years ago it was destroyed by the premature flash of gunpowder in a store lock. Others are planning for to-night They have found out the hour the last member of a family retires. They are in collusion with a servant who is to leave a back window unlocked. They know at what hour the wealthy man goes home inebriated from his club-room, and have planned from what alley to come out with the slung-shot. Nothing visible, but in this den of thieves how many false keys, ugly pocket-knives, brass knuckles and revolvers? There are a few vulgar pictures on the wall, and the inevitable bar. Rum these people must have, to rest them after exciting marauder. Rum they must have, before they start for a new expedition of arson, of larceny, or murder. Not ordinary rum. It has been poisoned four times—first by the manufacturer, then by the wholesale dealer, then by the retailer, then by the saloon keeper. Having been poisoned four times, it is just right now to fit one for any cruelty or desperation. These men have calculated to the last quarter of a glass just how much is enough to qualify them for their work. They are professional criminals. There are about 2,200 of them in New York. They are as thoroughly drilled in school of crime for their bad work as for good work; the New York Medical College turns out doctors, or Columbia Law College trains lawyers, or Princeton trains clergymen. They have been apprentices and journeymen in crime, but have now set up for themselves. These are the men who want to look at your directory, and, while their accomplices go in to employ your time, slip into your store safe. These are the forgers who get one of your cancelled checks, practicing on writing your name till the bank is as thoroughly deceived as when in 1870 a counterfeit check of Cornelius Vanderbilt indorsed by Henry Keep for $75,000 was promptly paid by a city bank. These are the pickpockets, about 400 of them, who ride beside you in stages, helping you pass the change, and stand beside you when you are shopping, helping examine the goods, and weep beside you at the funerals, and sometimes bow their head beside you in churches, doing their work with such dexterity that your affliction at the monetary loss is mitigated by your appreciation of the skill of the operator. The most successful of these are females, on the principle that when woman is good she is better than man, but, when bad, she is worse. She stands so much further up than man that when she falls she falls further. Some of these professional thieves take the garb of clergymen, have the dignity of a doctor of divinity, coat buttoned to the chin, white cravat, and look as if they were just going to pronounce the benediction, while all the time they are calculating the position of your watch or portmonnaie. Among the skilled thieves of your city are about 1,000 whose entire business it is to snatch things. Going in pairs, one is seemingly doing business with the proprietor at one end of the store, while his accomplice is doing liberal business at the other end of the store. While the proprietor of the establishment is graciously smiling upon what seems an elegant lady in one part of the establishment, her partner in crime is putting a roll of goods in her crocodile pocket, large enough to swallow anything. These dash in jewellery windows, and, before the clerks know what is the excitement, are a block away, looking innocent, and ready to join in the pursuit of the offenders with stentorian voice, crying "Stop thief!"

You might think that these men and women would get rich at knavery. Never. They get only a small percentage on the largest haul. It is the receiver of the stolen goods that makes the profits. These thieves, after taking $10,000 worth of spoil, live poor and die poor, and are poor to all eternity. Among the most villainous of all professional criminals of New York are the blackmailers—those who make people pay or have their characters tarnished. I have no advice to give the guilty, but an honest and upright man need never be afraid of them. Do not tamper with them, but in one hour hand the whole matter over to Superintendent Campbell, of Brooklyn, and you will always be vindicated. Every dollar you pay is toward your own everlasting enthrallment. A man in a cavern fighting a tigress might as well let her bite off one hand on the supposition that she would let him off with the rest of his body. The first thing for you to do is to shoot the tigress. No one's character is ever sacrificed till he sacrifices it himself. But you surrender reputation and family and fortune and your soul when you pay the first farthing to a blackmailer. But there are through all these dens of crime those who excite only our pity. They were and having done wrong once they in despair go to the bottom. Such was the man who last Wednesday in New York stole a roll of goods from a store, went to the police station, said he was hungry, and wanted to be sent to prison. Such are the young men who make a wrong entry in their employers' books or borrow from the funds of an establishment, feeling sure they will rectify it soon, but sickness or unforeseen circumstances make it impossible to make it right. And so in exposure and disgrace they give up everything. Such are many of the unfortunates among the sewing women who try to earn livelihood by making shirts for thirty-five and fifty cents the dozen, and then the work fails them. The legal profession were put out of sight by shyster lawyers, and some of the police magistrates were worse than the criminals arraigned before them, and the most notorious thief since the creation of the world was a State Senator, holding princely levees at the Delevan House, Albany. Those times put thousands of men on the wrong track, practically saying: "What is the use of honest work when knavery yields better dividends? What is the use in going a foot in shoes that you paid for yourself, when you can sweep through Broadway with livery supplied by public funds? Get an office with large salary if you can, if not, then an office with small salary, and steal all you can lay your hands on, calling it perquisites, and appoint your friends to subordinate offices where they can help you carry on the unlimited swindle and get more perquisities." Ten years ago many of the young men of our cities were 18 years of age. They looked at their fathers, hard at work with pen or trowel, or yard-stick, making only a cramped living, while men who threw themselves on their political wits had plenty of money without work. Do you wonder that the sons were fascinated with dissipated indolence, and that now, ten years having been added, they are 28 years of age, and in the full swing of vagabondism. The putrified politicians of ten years ago sowed the seed for a large part of the crop now being harvested for the almshouse and the penitentiary.

I don't care whether you like it or not, I tell you there will be found at last in heaven 500,000 converted thieves, pickpockets, gamblers, desperadoes, murderers, and outcasts. That makes that exquisite out yonder give a twitch to his kid glove, and that lady pull closer around her the skirts of her silk dress lest it be tarnished. "What", you say, "is heaven going to be such a common place as that?" Yes, it is to be the most common place in the whole universe. All classes of persons, having had their hearts changed by the grace of God, will go there.

THE FACT IS, THERE IS GOING TO BE A SECOND DELUGE.

"Why," you say, "I thought the rainbow was the sign that there was never to be another flood." But there will be another flood. It will rain more than forty days and forty nights. The Alps will go down under it, and hence all Europe. The Himalaya will go down under it, and hence all Asia. Kilmandjaro will go down under it, and hence all Africa. Mount Washington will go down under it, and hence all America. There will be a great ark immediately, larger than Noah's ark. It will have quadrillions of passengers. It will be a deluge of mercy, and the ark that floats it will have five doors—one on the north to let the frozen populations come in, one on the south to let the sweltering and sunburnt enter, one on the east to let China come in, one on the west to let Christ descend with all His flashing escort of cherubim and archangel. And, as the first rainbow spanned the heavens, giving sign that the deluge of destruction would never return, the rainbow of this second flood will give sign that the deluge of mercy will never depart. Sail on, O ship of salvation; with freight of countless immortals make for an eternal shore. The thunder of the last day will be the cannonade that will greet you into Harbor. Church triumphant, stretch down hands of light across the gangway to welcome into port the church militant. Hallelujah, for the Lord God omnipotent reigneth.
