Rumors are rife of an early dissolution of the British Parliament. The "unwonted activity of Conservative electoral machinery" is one of the indications. The Beaconsfield Government is clearly of the opinion that nothing is to be gained from a Tory standpoint, from deferring the general elections. Ministers have been rather severely criticized by some o their own supporters for not ordering the elections during the flush of Lord Beas consfield's Berlin Treaty victory. many of the people the eclat of that diplomatic triumph passed for the crowning of British power and prestige abroad, and on the crest of the great wave of popularity then raised, he would almost certainly have been floated back to power again for another Parliamentary term, which, at his time of life, would mean, in all probability, the entire balance of his career. Strange to say, however, the fact is that, notwithstanding the apparent popularity of the Government in the populous centres, a majority of the by elections that have been held have been carried by the Liberals, and it is by no means certain that a general election, if held now, would reinstate the British Tortes in power. The longer the election is deferred the more problematical will Tory success become. Hence the desire of the Tory party for instant action and the quiet confidence of their opponents in the reaction which is now believed to be undermining the Beaconsfield regime. The Toronto school authorities are moving in regard to the matter of City him.
