strong excitement. 'Stop! stop,' said Robert Edbury quite ernly. 'You are taking an altogether mistaken view of the truth. Ask your mother, ask any one. But you are weak and ill yet, Jessie, and the time has not come for me to insist on this. Let us think of him poor fellow, as one who must, had he lived, have suffered much, and who has mercifully found peace in

He stood for a moment looking with a fond longing into the small, sweet face from which the summer roses had fied with gradged haste. Then taking from his pocket a fragile gold and crystal cir-clet, be held out to her. It was the bracelet she lost the first night of their meet-

'I found it under your window that night with the violets, he said. 'It fell from your arm. Will you take it back

A faint lovely tinge of red flicker went into her cheeks once more. 'No!' she answered looking into dark face with tender, gentle wistfulness 'I-I don't sant to recall that night, or anything connected with it. You may keep it if you like.

So he kissed her hand and said farewell. But he left a whisper behind 'When the roses bloom again, remember me. A year went by and no message came. The second year he said to himself, 'Surely she will send for me now! But May and June crept by, and July came, but not one word came from Jessie Chasedane. He was growing sick with a wild chemists everywhere, and we recommend and helpless despair, for he felt how | those who have doubts concerning the truth worse than useless it would be to go uncalled; when one day a letter came fluttering like a white bird to his heart. 'The roses are in bloom and there is one for you!

Social Sensation in Milwaukee.

Milwaukee (Wis) society, Mrs. Charles Wheeler having tried to seperate her daughter from her son in law she dislikes, by arresting the young woman on a charge of manity. Kate Wheeler, a charming girl of 18 years, was a favorite in the social circles of the city, but she was ardently in love with Fred Boynton. The mother fanned the match by violently opposing it, calling her daughter crazy and at last Kate left the parental roof and became the guest of William Young, a friend of the family. Mr. Young found out that the young fellow was all right, smiled on his courtship and soon there was a quiet wedding. The mother seemed to relent, and wrote the couple to come home. They came, but met two deputy sheriffs at the door, armed with a warrant to arrest Mrs. Boynton for ins sanity. The young husband stood in the breach, wi. le his wife ran away to the office of her old friend, Mr. Young. The clerck locked her in, summoned Mr. and Mrs. Young from their dinner, and together the party went to jail, where Mr. Boynton had been taken for resisting the officers. An investigation showed that the certificates of insanity were not issued on a personal examination, whereupon the judge set them aside, and soon the young couple were safe at William Young's defying the crafty mother-inlaw, who still insists that Kate is mad Sore Threat. It never fails in Croup. It and that she will yet get her into an
