Murder without Motive. REMARKABLE CASE IN ENGLAND.

A murder trial in England has recentillustrated, in a very shocking manner, the fibility of juries to convict innoc-ni men, even of a capital crime. In Augus la t, a laborer named Cornish was fount murdered in a fi-ld near the City of Wellin Someiseishire, his head beaten in wi' as one, and a man named Bisgrove state ing beside him. The story told by this It was ascertained that a man named Sweet, and his mistress, a woman called Drew, had been in company with bo Bi grove and Cornish up to very near the sleeping Cernish, and had then rejoined chases. Sweet and remained in his company until both were arrested. Her story was suppos- 20th., ed to have been an invention for the purpose of screening her paramour Sweet. and the jury evidently believed that the quarrel had occured between the two prisoners and the murdered man, and had oeen prompted by jealousy. Sweet and Bisgr ve were both found guilty; but no sconer had they been remanded to jail than Bisgrove made a confession, entirely exonerating Sweet, and corroborating the evidence of the woman. The contession reveals one of the most extraordinary cases to our knowledge. . The murderer had gone to sleep by his victim's side. "When, I waked up," said he, "I was going away, but something seemed to tell me that I must murder that man, and then went over to the river and found the stone and brought it over my head, and throwed it down on the man's head. . . say. They made up their theory of the murder, and not being able to act if out with a single culprit, they had to secure a second one.
