This Report which has just been read contains the opinions of the members of the Committee who framed it concern ing the evidence taken in the Chancery suit now pending and their deductions from that evidence. Now I will leave i to your good sense, gentlemen; to say whether it is possible that the gentlemen who compose this Committee are competent to form an opinion concerning points of law embarassing in the last degree concerning the result of evidence and figures which cover several hundred sheets of foolscap. But apart from this question altogether I conceive it to be an established principle of propriety that when a matter like this is referred for decision to the Courts the litigating parties should wait for the results before pronouncing an opinion upon the case, and so highly is the principle considered that several cases have lately occurred in England in which the Court of Chancery has severely punished persons for pubishing remarks on pending cases or the evidence adduced in them. It is contrary to British principles to condemn a man unheard, and the Report which has just been read is an exparte statement framed in the absence of Mr. Ferguson's Advocate. Ladmit, of course, that it has no legal effect or operation but that man must indeed be void of all sense of honor who could see with indifference a Report of this kind laid before a highly intelligent body of men from all parts of the County, who, be they ever so impartial, must give credence to th statement contained in it.
