Argyll's Patronymic.

SOME INFORMATION ON THE SUBJECT.

The following extract from a letter addressed to the editor of the Halifax Morning Herald cannot fail of being nteresting to many of our readers:

"I notice that the American press, and many of the Canadian press, are committing sad blunders already with regard to the Argyll family's patronymic. Those writers, one and all, persist in calling the Marquis MacCallum More, alleging that that is his patronymic; whereas the Argyll patronymic is MacCallum Mor, or, in English, the son of Great Colin, or Colin the Great. The real founder of the ing cold. Euch cold relapse of the great Campbell family of Argyle was Sir Colin Campbell of Lochawe; who was the sixth in the regular descent from the first Chief of the Clan. Sir Colin greatly distinguished himself as a soldier and statesman, and wes keighted by King Alexan-der III. in 1280. He was remarkable for his tall, handsome personal appearance, great prowess as a warrior, and eminent for his patriotism. After he was knighted his clausman, and Highlanders generally, called him Caitean Mor, or Great Colin. His successor consequently went by the name, MacCailean Mor; and this has been continued as the true patronymic of the Argyll family for about of the country. This term will be much It is true, Sir Walter Scott, Lord Macaulay, and several other great writers, used the words MacCallum More; but they knew nothinng of Gaelic, and were entirely wrong. The Argyll family al-

Of the noble Marquis's predecessors it would be superfluous to say anything here. History is full of the deeds of the great Argylls. In the Senate, as in the ield, they were alike renowned. Of one of them Pope said

heir, John Douglass Sutherland Campbell, was born in 1845, and was married at the Chapel Royal, Windsor, on 21st March, 1871, to the Princess Louise, Her Majesty Queen Victoria's daughter, the noble Marquis appearing in full Highland costume during the solemnities o marriage. Bears have been more numerous than for very many years, and crowd into the settlements in search of food wherewith to fatten speedily for the rapidly approachweather is increasing in severity and the winds return more constantly to easterly and north-easterly points. I exp et to see good sleighing and severe cold in November instead of the bare ground and absence of frost as experienced for the last two years. In December we may expect a tempestuous month with heavy blockades of snow, as in the 'Olden Time.' Then will come a lull or break in the weather. This term I cannot attempt to locate definitely, bat it will be in proximity to midwinter During this period the snows will melt rapidly, and will prohably cause extensive floods in many parts of this branch being under the direction of Miss C.
