THE FEARFUL EXPERIENCE OF A MAN UNDER ITS SPELL

How It Feels to Be Fascinated by the Hypnotic Influence of a Serpent-Facing Certain Death and Yet Inable to Move a Limb.

I hate snakes with a holy hatred; but, not being afflicted with "nerves" in any flour. We happened to be out of the great measure, am not afraid of them under ordinary circumstances, and even in the somewhat out of the way position in which I found myself on Saturday, the 17th of April, 1897, I can hardly say now whether it is to fear or fascination, as entirely distinct from terror, that my feelings on that particular occasion are to be ascribed.

Accompanied by my friend, Mr. Lindsay Turner, I went to spend the holidays on a shooting trip in the Blue mountains, New South Wales.

On that memorable Saturday we had done some hard climbing amid beautiful scenery and around a great gap when we came out on a high level which ran back the way we had come. We decided to return, Turner keeping to the higher level and I by the route we had traversed, but with the understanding that we were not to lose sight of one another. On the return I had very little difficulty in regaining the former level, for the gap ran many yards back, and I had only to follow it, holding by the projections of the ledge, until a firmly rooted shrub assisted

I had negotiated the narrow, broken ledges and was about to enter comparative safety when, without any warning, my friend, the snake, came slipping leisurely along through the ferns and scrub within a few feet of where I stood at the extreme end of the terrace, upon a four inch ledge, i. I'll a un will it. The flagers of both hands stuck in a shoulder high erevice. Both the reptile and I came to a sudden halt upon seeing each other, the snake's black. forked tongue flickering in and out as i raised its head threateningly.

I wondered what on earth the brute could be doing in that spot, but supposed it had got out of its course when making for the low ground and presumed that. after the nature of its kind, it would seuttle back again as I advanced. I was on the point of moving forward when, to no utter horror, instead of retreating, it be gan to sway its head gently to and fro horizontally, at the same time coming toward me by imperceptible degrees unti It lar with its round nowe within striking delphia Inquirer. distance of my leggings.

I cannot account for the feelings which took possession of me I tried to retreat-I had only to go back a pace or two, and I would be in absolute security—but for the life of me I could not do so. Let it not be thought that at this time I had the slightest fear, netwithstanding the fact that a bite from the snake meant certain | two lifelong friends quarreled, and noth wonder both at the serpent's behavior and the difference.
