ALL THE DECOGTIONS ICE ENTERS SHOULD BE SHUNNED.

Strong Advice on a Subject of Which Too Little is Knowr-Origin of Cholera Morbus and Agute Inflammation-A Way of Taking Ice That is Not Hurtful.

The necessity for frequent draughts of pure water when the temperature ranges from eighty to a hundred degrees in the shade has led to a free and widespread use of ice as a means of cooling drinking-water. Ice is an excellent thing in its place and a great necessity, but it is a grave question whether, as used in connection with drinking-water, it is not productive of serious disturbances to the functional and organic processes of the human system. Thirst is the expression of a call of the bodily tissues for water. This necessity for the introduction of water into the blood and so to immediate contact with the tissues is expressed by a reflex nervous action in the throat, giving rise to the sensation of thirst. In a normal condition of the mucous membrane of the throat this call for something to drink is never manifested un less there is a general demand on the part of the system for the introduction of water. The immediate action of applications of ice-water internally or externally is to constringe the local capillary blood-vessels, and, under the law of reaction, as soon as the application ceases there ensues a congested condition of the same blood vessels a condition in which there is an unnatural and undue quantity of blood in the parts which have been subjected to the applica-

It is a well known fact that on a warm day those persons who take ice-water never seem to be able to get enough to satisfy their thirst, and the more they drink the more they want to drink. A glass of icewater is very grateful on a hot day, but every little while the same thirsty, parched feeling in the throat is experienced, and the see pitcher is resorted to, and this is continued at frequent intervals throughout the day. The real needs and necessities of the body, and the thirst consequent thereupon, - would be immediately relieved by drinking of tepid water or even hot water.

The injurious effects of drinking ice-water, however, do not cease with simple congestions of the throat, for they are far more complicated and serious. The habitual use of iced water, iced tea, ices and all ice-cold Interesting Items Gathered Mon, the preparations produces in the stomach a state of conjestion which disturbs and greatly retards the process of digestion. And it is this congestion or inflammation which in many cases gives rise to dyspepsia, congestion and catarrhal conditions of the stomach, both acute and chronic in character, and which, by sympathetic relations, establish ongestion of the liver and bowels.

Upon the introduction into the stomach of food at a temperature much less than one hundred degrees the dissolving process wrought by the gastric juices becomes very slow, or ceases entirely, indigestion results in consequence, irritation of the nerves in the coats of the stomach is created and a reflex nervous irritation in brain, spine, lungs, heart, kidneys and other parts of the body is often set up. Cholera morbus and acute inflammation of the stomach and bowels is frequently the result of drinking ice-cold beverages or of eating ices; and cases of congestion of the brain amounting almost to congestive apoplexy, have been very suddenly brought on by the introduction into the stomach of ices and ice-cold drinks. Catarrh of the throat and nasal passages is induced and kept up by the local irritation sympathetic with conditions of the stomach and inflammation of the mucous membrane of the digestive tract.

It is sa id Bright's disease is more universal in its manifestations and much more common, as a disease, in this country than abroad, and there are those who are decidadly inclined to connect this fact with the habit of using ice-water.

Any substance introduced into the stomach which would cause inflammation or congestion of the mucous surfaces, might cause the same phenomena to take place in adjacent parts. Ice may be used to cool water, but it should be drunk merely as cool water, not as ice-cold water. If ices are to be eaten they should be dissolved in the mouth or melted before entering the stomach.

ST. PEFERSBURG, Aug. 2. - M. Katkoff, editor of the Moscow Gazette, died last night in the presence of his wife and children.

The powerful editor of the Moscow Gazette gave utterance as the voice of despotism against liberalism, constitutionalism parliamentarism, and all things foreign; in fact, against everything that does not tend to complete centralization and crushing autocratic prohibition of all individual liberty and initiative. In recognition of this service the czar had presented him with the cross and decoration of St. Vladimir. It was the only prominent literary enterprise in Russia favoured with the imperial smile. ANGLING ON THE RIVER.

How the Ladies Indulge in the Sport-They're as Successful as the Men. New York Mail and Express. Just now on the St. Lawrence river al most every boat carries a lady angler. They make a bright showing on the river with their pretty costumes, which are, as a rule, made of bright-colored flannels and topped off with a monstrous straw hat. It is but fair to say that these are much more picturesque in appearance than their male companions, who, as a rule, do not pay much attention to the æsthetics of the situa tion. They handle the rod dexterously, and hook a fish with coolness and skill. To show you what an interest they take in sport I will tell you of an experience I had not long ago with a New York lady angler. We were at the head of Simcoe island, which is the first island at the foot of Lake Ontario and opposite Kingston. When there is any sort of wind on the lake the waves roll in there in a regular sea. We were in a small boat making good catches of two pound bass. The waves grew more and more obstreperous, and it really was not safe to stay there any longer. Our oarsman-one of the very best at Alexandria Bay guides-could not hold the boat in position and keep it bailed not make any suggestion of returning, howviolent motion of the boat. I then insisted upon going in. Just as the boat was started for the shore, the lady, who had not drawn in her line, struck a fish. This cured her seasickness instantly, and she was wide awake to land her prize. She played that fish at least fifteen minutes, and fortunately I was able to land it for her without our operation. The fish was a black bass and weighed three and one quarter pounds. do not believe that the most enthusiastic and experienced angler could have exhibited more pluck, coolness and skill than this fair disciple of St. Peter.
