BROADBRIM'S LETTER.

THE SCANDALS OF PUBLIC OFFICE RUTHLESSLY EXPOSED.

A Norwegian Woman is Brutally Used-A Man Who is Not Fitted for Preaching-Sharp Has a New Counsel, a Man With a Pull on the Governor A Bad. Bad Coachman.

New York, Aug. 5. -- Some years ago was discovered by the government that the immigrants landing on our shores were robbed and maltreated by gangs of murderous thugs who lay in wait for every passenger vessel, and as soon as the quarantine officer had performed his duty they surrounded the ship like a flock of vultures, and in, spite of the protests of the captain, proceeded to only been finished a little over a year, and carry off the passengers and crew. A more infamous band of pirates never existed on the face of the earth. At this time we had no river police. There was no one to whom the captain could apply for relief except by lightning struck the flagstaff on the dome the slow process of a warrant for the offenders, and as these men were a political power in the wards along the river, and the magistrates and court officers were all their friends, the chances were that he "never got any satisfaction, or was put off till his vessel was ready for sea. Immigrants were robbed and drugged and murdered, and the bodies that floated up from the muddy river were the only witnesses of the crime. At last a shocking assassination and robbery roused the city to the necessity of action, and an emigration commission was formed which was to have entire control of all the immigrants landing on our shores, and Castle Garden at the battery was placed at their disposal. The idea in its inception was full of benevolence and philanthropy, but it was not long till it fell under the control of a lot of knaves who worked it for their own individual profit, and they worked it for all it was worth. You can well understand that when four or five thousand people are landed at Castle-Garden in a day there are various sources of profit. The people were not allowed to go outside the garden to get anything to eat. A loaf of bread that cost five cents outside, and was then sold at a profit, cost ten or fifteen inside; apples were five and six cents each : the poorest sand withes ten or fifteen cents; a sheet of paper and an envelope ten cents; and hundreds of all kinds of petty extortions, among which were the profits of the individual who had the changing of the money, for all of the immigrants brought their native carrency with them. The money changer had a bonanza worth twenty or thirty thousand year. But this was not the main source of revenue. They received large subsidies from the railroad companies, and it was generally understood that to be appointed a commissioner was equal to being presented with a

The emigration commissions have done many rascally things, which have brought on them the indignation and contempt of the entire community, but their action in the last week, in the case of wyoning Norwegian woman, for assinine stupidity and malevolence, stands almost without a parallel in the annals of the board. She was engaged to be married to a young man in her own country, and, under promise of marriage, fell from grace. The young man was willing to redeem hisepledge and marry her, but his parents refused assent, so he could not be married in Norway. He came to this country in company with the girl's brother-in-law, and as soon as he got the money he sent for his intended wife, and the brother in-law sent for his wife, so that the two sisters started to America together, each happy in the thought that the misfortune and disgrace which the younger had suffered was now to be honorably atoned for. A stupid old fossil who disgraces the emigration board was afraid that she was an improper person and resolved to send her back. Bonds of the very best class were offered that the woman and her child should | health, his home and his wife are gone. not become a public charge, but with a pigheaded obstinacy that defied all reason or right they determined to send her back to Norway, though the woman had money in their pocket, and tickets for her new home in Minnesota. Thinking that she was friendless one of the employees attempted to outrage her, and it is thought to shield their henchman they determined to get rid of her. The same commissioners pass thousands of ignorant Mormons to Salt Lake; Lazaroni and brigands from Italy; disreputable and disgustingly dirty, are passed by thousands; Poles and Hungarians; Anarchists ripe for the gallows are brought here by the ship-load without question; thieves and thugs are passed without inspection; and an English criminal sentenced to imprisonment for life, just pardoned by the queen, is now on his way over to this country, and no objection made to his landing. The treatment of this unfortunate Norwegian woman is little less than a crime, and if such stupid numskulls are to run the board, better, far better, abolish the commission.

The pastor of the Fort Green Presbyterian church, Benjamin Staton, who was driven out of Brooklyn with the sentence of condemnation upon him by the Brooklyn presby. tery, has just turned up in Wyoming as the pastor of a country church. The revelations on Mr. Stanton's trial were a shock to the entire community, and when he left Brooklyn it was hoped that he would seek some other profession, and never disgrace the pulpit any more. These hopes have not been realized, and, aided by some letters. procured from parties in Brooklyn, he has succeeded in getting another call. If he manages his affairs in Wyoming as he did in Brooklyn and other places, the Congregational church of Douglas will yet have to repent of their choice of a spiritual shepherd. There has been a very general inquiry as to why Bourke Cockran was engaged at this late stage to argue for a new trial in the Sharp case. I don't profess to see any deeper into a millstone than any other wizard who can't see any deeper than I can; but a man with half an eye, and a glass eye at that, might be able to see that much. The object is, of course, to save Jake Sharp from going to Sing Sing. If the new trial is refused there is only one man that can save him, and that is Governor Hill. Bourke Cockran is an out and out Hill man, and he took especial pains to let the president know it. Governor Hill has an eye on Washington, and he is casting anchors to leeward, so that if things turn out right he can walk right into the White | magazine telling why she is a she, then? House. Bourke Cockran is his friend, and Bourke Cockran is a power in the New York Democracy, and it is hoped in case the courts refuse him a new trial that our new congressman can represent Sharp's case so eloquently to the executive that the old boodler may be spared the infamy of states prison. One would have thought that with six of the ablest lawyers in the country, whose aggregate fees are over a hundred and fifty chousand dollars, they might possibly have given the judge all the law that was necessary, but the whole of them put together when it comes to the executive would not weigh a feather in the scale alongside Bourke Cockran. With the thermometer at 99 it is not good weather for prophesying, but keep your weather eye open and don't forget that Bourke Cockran in the Sharpe case. To be continued in ar next.

The heat has been simply frightful, so much so that we hail with thankfulness a thunder storm even if it knocks the chimney off the house. Speaking of knocking off chimneys, our Brooklyn neighbors rejoice in a very handsome building for the Young Men's christian association. It has in that time it has been struck three times by lightning, while a profane whiskey shop adjoining it on the corner has escaped without a scratch. On Thursday night the and shivered it from top to, bottom severely shocking nearly fifty people who were in the building. Some were knocked flat, others were almost paralyzed, but when the policeman went into the whiskey shop, expecting to find everybody dead, the bar-keeper asked him what was the matter. He said he heard a little noise and did not know what to make of it, and asked the policeman to take a drink. If it had been the whiskey shop that had been knocked into flinders we would not have been surprised, but to think of the young christians being knocked out has set us all profoundly thinking, Can it be possible that the Darwinian the ory of the survival of the fittest can be true? A prize of an anti-poverty medal is offered for whoever shall give a solution of this mystery.

This week closes a remarkable remance by the death of one of the principal actors. In the city of Brooklyn lived a gentleman by the name of Clifford, who two years ago was in the enjoyment of an ample fortune and a pretty wife. They had lived together thirteen years, and not a cloud had crossed the matrimonial horizon. But as Mr. Clifford increased in wealth Mrs. Clifford suggested a carriage, and keeping a carriage involved a coachman, and this was the rock on which Mr. Clifford split. The coachman was a smooth-tongued rascal and he paid a great deal more attention to Mrs. Clifford than he did to his stable or to his horses. At last Mrs. Clifford showed by her manner that there was a matrimonial screw loose somewhere, for instead of saying "my love" and "my dear" as she used to do before they got the coach, she said "yes, sir," and "Mr. Clifford." In due course of time Mr. Clifford began to smell a large-sized mouse, so to satisfy his doubts he bored a gimlet hole in his chamber door, and, hiding himself in the cellar, awaited developments. He had not long to wait, for the coachman, thinking that he had gone away, proceeded to make himself perfectly at home. Mr. Clifford stole up stairs, and putting his weather eye to the key-hole got evidence for a first-class divorce. But he had a club, and he proceeded to make short work of the coachman. Mrs. Clifford came to the rescue, and the result was that Mr. Clifford was knocked out in the second round, and next day all the parties were pulled up before the court. Mr. Clifford discharged the coachman and Mrs. Clifford hired him at an advance of wages. Then Rogers the coachman ran away with Clifford's horse, and Clifford had him arrested for horse-stealing. Mrs. Clifford swore that she ordered him to take the horse, and he was discharged. Every time the men came together they fought like tigers, but Mrs. Clifford always helped the coachman. The case became the talk of the town, and the question with Clifford was how to get rid of Rogers. The coachman solved the problem last week by swallowing the contents of a bottle of carbolic acid, and so relieved Clifford of his rival. But poor Clifford is ruined, his fortune, his Verily, this is an awful wicked world, and the fewer we praise in it the better. -BROADBRIM.

THE STREETS COMMITTEE.

Passing the Accounts-The Requests of the Citizens and How Disposed of.

A meeting of the streets committee was held yesterday afternoon. Mr. Holmes offered to sell a piece of land to the city for the widening of Montreal street for $40. Deferred. The pay roll, $750, and accounts, were passed. Hansen, carter, drove water to the military camp grounds ten and a half days, and billed for $26.25. Last year he did the same work for $2.25 per day for eleven days. The aldermen decided to pay Hansen the same rate this year. An account of G. Robinson & Co, carriage makers, was laid over. Mr. Holmes applied to have Magdalene street improved. He owned houses on it, and they were idle because entrance could not be got into the yards. No action. Messrs. R. Shaw and W. Allen asked for repairs to the boardwalk on the west side of Brock street. Patrick Lyons protested against an account sent him by the city for $41,40 frontage tax. Discussion of the subject postponed.
