COLLEGE SOCIETIES.

NOTED ORGANIZATIONS AMONG THE CLASSES AT YALE.

The Most Profoundly Secret "Skull and Bones"-The "Scroll and Key" and the "Wolf's Head"-Other Prominent Class Societies.

Yale's most celebrated senior societies are "Skull and Bones," "Scroll and Key" and "Wolf's Head." To be elected a member of "Skull and Bones" is considered one of the greatest honors that can fall to a Yale man. To secure such an election a man must achieve celebrity in one direction or another. Wealth or popularity is of minor importance. The society is limited to fifteen members. Among them are generally to be found the captains of the university crew, the baseball and football teams, and also prominent track athletes. Among others generally chosen are the valedictorian of . the senior class, one or more members of the board of editors of The Yale Literary Magazine, and one or more officers of the various athletic organizations. The society has been in existence fifty-five years, and numbers among its past members some of the most noted men who have graduated from Yale. Its meetings are held in a moss covered sandstone building situated not far from the campus, and are conducted with the most profound secrecy. No "Bones" man has ever been induced to disclose any of the doings of the society, and genuine offense is taken if it be referred to in his presence.

Next in importance comes the "Scroll and Key" society. Its members are all men prominent in some direction, but, as a rule, they are less celebrated than the "Bones" men. Popularity and wealth are important considerations in the choice of many of the "Keys" men, and the honor of membership is almost as eagerly sought as in "Bones."

The society yelept "Wolf's Head" has sprung into existence within a few years, and has grown to a good deal of importance and popularity. It has, like its sister organizations, a beautiful building, the interior of which is said to be handsomely furnished.

THE JUNIOR SOCIETIES. The junior societies, "Delta Kappa Epsilon" and "Psi Upsilon," are ancient and bonorable organizations which have been celebrated in story and in song. Prominence and popularity are the important factors in the choice of members. Up to the year 1877 both societies were accustomed to give Thanksgiving plays in Alumni hall. These performances were very attractive to old graduates and town people, but the college boys fell into the habit of doing and saying such objectionable things on these occasions that the faculty finally prohibited further public performances; and so it has come to pass that the yearly exhibitions are now witnessed only by the members of the society under whose auspices they are held. The exhibitions take the form of minstrel shows and burlesques on the plays of Shakespeare or some more modern author. The minstrel shows frequently include imitations of eccentricities of the various professors, and are invariably received with great gusto. Costumes from New York are employed, and much time is spent in rehearsing for the presentations. Similar plays are given in May on the occasion of the initiation of the sophomore members.

In addition to the fraternities mentioned above, there are several sophomore and freshman societies and a large number of Sheffield Scientific school societies; but they are less important than those that have been named.—Arthur Edmands Jenks in Lippin-

Sword Practice in India.

The quiet dweller in Europe will scarcely believe the prodigies performed in sword cutting by these coarse, ill looking bits of curved metal, costing frequently no more than 1s. 6d. to 2s. I had shot numerous wild beasts, when I was told by an expert that my hunting education was very deficient, as I could not handle a scimeter to stop my game. was told to exercise continually on a pillar of soft clay, and thus acquire the drawing cut at the proper part of the blade, then on a newly killed wildcat or jackal, kneaded previous to the practice by the feet of a heavy man till the carcass became a loose, soft mass; then on a great pond carp, a fish clad with heavy, horny scales, like elastic mail-considered an A1 feat to test man and sword.

My first trial at this experiment resulted in a triple fracture of the good blade, sundry scales flying through the air uncut, only dislodged; then the artistic tour de force at paper cones placed on a table, and muslin thrown up to a height—all manner of strange and difficult tasks, which being only ornamental, I fersook for the useful and more easy decapitation of fierce quadrupeds, beginning with a wounded wild hog of full growth, and on essaying the sloping stroke behind the ear sweeping off the head nearly, that important part dropping between the fore feet. Not long before I had seen a bold young Ghoorka princeling dismount from his elephant, leaving it standing to await his return, and follow on foot alone an immense boar he had wounded with his rifle. On nearing the powerful brute it champed its foamy tusks to charge. He drew his kookre (or Nepaulese sword) and as it sprang at him the blade was buried across piggy's back, all but severing him in two parts!-English Mechanic.

She "Hollered Right Out."

Aunt Nancy herself, delivered in a deep, awed tone, while she sat up as straight as an arrow, in her best black gown (not quite comfortably "dressed up"), knitting rapidly and occasionally looking over her spectacles at him. "You see, I'd never rid in the keers before, an' 't was all kind o' strange, and I was narvous an' oneasy, an' kep' a fearing that suthin' o' ruther was goin' ter happen. But she kep' a tellin' of me 't was all right, an' that they'd ring a bell in a minute, an' then we'd be off. I was lookin' outen the winder, an' I dunno how 't was, I didn't hear no bell, but all of a sudden, jist as I was beginnin' to think we never would go-ugh!an' we began to move all to once! Well there! it took me so sudden-you see I've been used to drivin' our old mare, an' she's awful apt to start, an' I hev' to be on the lookout always when I'm a drivin' of her, an' when that thing gave that jerk I jist hollered right out, 'Whoa!' When I'd done it I looked around to see if any one had heard me, and everybody was a starin' at me. I dunno what they thought!"-Boston Transcript "Listener"

Beautiful Barkeepers. "The handsomest men in New York," said a well known physician the other day, "are the bartenders. The modern bartender of a flest class barroom is required to be abstemious in his habits. Saloon keepers, as a rule, do not want a man around them who drinks. The result is that bartenders have good complexions and clear eyes. They have plenty of pearance, and as a class make up better than any other set of men in New York. You might put a hundred of them in a bali room and they would outshine the pick and flower of New York aristocracy."-New York

of the Crucifixions of Boyhood Days-Hereditary Depravity.

One of the crucifixions of my boyhood days. was in the fact that I had the dry nursing of all sorts of "young 'uns," as they were generally termed. Every farmer that I worked for seented to have one of these specimens, aged from 10 to 18 months. -

If any proof is lacking as to the cause of natural depravity, it could be found in the breed I had to cares for. They were always queruleus, squalling, rapacious, intolerable. They were cruel, for they invariably scratched the faces of those who attended them, clawed the breasts that fed them, throttled dogs that came within their reach, drew cats backward by the tail, smashed, tore, and defaced everything which they were permitted to touch. They were voracious as sharks, and predatory misers in the matter of property. Every. thing they had, everything they saw in the possession of others, belonged of right, in their estimate, to them. After getting through the vernacular as far as "a-goo, agoo," their next step was "Mine! Mine!" Each of them was Jay Gould from the start, and wanted the earth.

Often when holding some squalling bieruptive brat, which, with clenched fist, closed and streaming eyes, red and puffed features, legs and body as stiff as stone posts, yelled, struggled and fought without the slightest reason other than such as are to be found in natural diabolism, did I wonder why there is such a dislike of Herod the Great, who showed himself to be a ruler of consummate value, and whose only popular failure was the slaughter of the Bethlehemic babes.

I worked one summer for the wickedest man in the county, who lived on the outskirts of the hill country, who could neither read nor write, and who generally gave utterance to an oath or some atrocious blasphemy at every breath. He had an infant about 15 months old, which I had to trundle and coddle, and which I always believed was an incarnate devil. Long before it could say "da da" .t could utter with vim the expression, "B; Dod!" I remember even yet the little wretch as he sat in a high chair at the table, with a bullet head covered with red, close curling hair, beady gray eyes, thick lips, flushed cheeks, and with a chuckle of glee would reiterate "By Dod! By Dod!" It causes me no profound grief to say that the father, having moved out of the vicinity, was sent to the state's prison for grand larceny.-Poliuto in Chicago Times.

Identity of Mutilated Money.

I am often asked whether this or that piece of mutilated money is redeemable. It is safe to say, unless the money's identity is entirely gone, that it is redeemable. In fact, one may say that money in the shape of ashes can be restored. It is a fact that after the Chicago fire ashes were redeemed. It came about in this way: It is customary in banks to do money up in packages, say of $10,000 each, and in the big fire of course hundreds and hundreds of these packages were reduced to ashes. But the shape of the package remained, and wherever the package could be sent on to Washington without crumbling the ashes, the money was sure to be replaced. It was done by nimble fingered women in the treasury department whose trained touch and sight are wonderfully acute.

It is well known that the ashes of the newspaper if dampened will show traces of the printing. So was it with the bills, These women would moisten the package of apparently useless ashes, and to their experienced eye the number and character of the bill would at once appear as if they had touched it with a magic wand. So thousands and thousands of dollars were redeemed by these patient women. A friend of mine, a country merchant, afraid of banks, placed a large sum of money in bills in a stone jar on a shelf in his store, where he thought it would be quite safe. When he went to look at it one day some time after it was a mass of fragments. Mice had got into the jar and chewed the bills into the minutest parts. Then they had mixed them all up, and altogether it was a fearful looking mess. He sent a cigar box full of it to me. I forwarded it to Washington, and what do you think Out of the $1,145 originally in the pile a little over $1,000 was redeemed, the parts beyond recall being only the mere fibers of the bills. So the man lost only $100 by his foolishness. The reclamation of such money is done entirely by women, whose patience especially fits them, for the monotonous work. -Bank President in Globe-Democrat.

Infatuated with Wagner's Music.

Judith Gautier became so infatuated with Wagner's music that she went to Bayreuth to live. There she used to dress in the garb of Lohengrin and other Wagnerian operatic heroes, and strove in every way actually to transform herself into one. She not only wore the heroic costume, and listened by the hour to the music connected with the heroic part, but assumed the manner and speech of the character into which she wished to be transformed. More than that. She tried the arts of witchcraft, and went through the most outlandish rites. On one occasion, when she had been trying for two weeks to turn herself into Tristan, she had a dream which she thought assured her success. In accordance with what she saw in the dream, she went out to a lonely spot at midnight, mixed a strange kettle of broth over a fire and walked about it for an hour chanting some of the lines of Tristan in the opera. Then the kettle upset and scalded her foot, whereupon she uttered a most unheroic scream, limped away and abandoned the whole business in deep dis-The Listener gives it as he heard it from gust.—Paris Cor. Chicago Tribune.

An Old Man's Wit.

"Women don't always have their wits about them," said an elderly gentleman the other morning. "A lady friend of mine came into my office with her little girl of 5. The pretty white dress of the latter had a streak of blood upon it, the result of a visit to a continue of blood upon it, the result of a visit to return dentist. The mother didn't want to return uptown with the child, as she was not through with her shopping. Could I help her out of her quandary? I took the child back to the toilet room, with the idea of washing out the stain, but a better plan occurred to me. The stain was a long, narrow, downward streak, and the white dress was pleated up and down. What do you think I did? I folded over one of the pleats and pinned it, thus hiding the stain from view. The mother asked: 'Why, how did you remove the stain without spreading it and taking the starch out? Then I showed her that it was still there. Her look was one of pleasure and chagrin. 'I must confess that you didn't help to raise your family in vain,' sho said, 'while you must think I am excessively stupid. And I amfor the plan ought to have suggested itself to me." "-Philadelphia Call.

Accumulation of Bonds.

An observing Washington gentleman has been examining the records and finds that the accumulation of government bonds is becoming marked. Interest checks are now sent to time to pay attention to their personal ap- 39,000 persons, whereas not long ago 60,000 checks were issued on the same amount. The concentration of holdings in large cities is also noticeable. - Brooklyn Eagle.
