DR. T. A. SLOCUM, Branch Office, 37 Yonge Street, Toronto. TRICK OF "TICKLING" TROUT.

A Process Well Known Among the Boys of Ireland-Its Success. "I was astonished to learn by Mr. Thorndyke's statement that the bears on the shores of Carbon river, at the base of the precipitous Mount Tacoma, have mastered the process of catching the book nosed salmon by the art of 'tickling,'" said a gentleman who was born on the Emerald isle, and is proud of it. "I wonder whether the boys in Ireland taught it to them or learned it from them? I know when I was a youngster we frish lads carried on the sport to an extent that led the gamekeepers to suspect that there were more and shrewder peachers in that part of the country than had ever been bounded out of it; but they never suspected that the ragged, barefooted boy, who whistled as he plucked the blackberries from the hedges, and would have been as familiar with the mariner's compass, had it been placed before him, as with a trout rod, creek reel line and cast of flies, was one of the licenseless culprits who caused the scarcity of trout.

"Yet so it was. When the keeper was well out of sight the small boy would throw away the blackberries which he had collected, but did not care to eat, and knowing by long experience where the big speckled fellows loved to lurk, he would dart to a deep still spot, well shaded, and where the bank overhung the water. Then, crawling to the edge, he would look cautiously over. If a trout was basking near the surface the dirty little hand, making no perceptible ripple in the stream, so carefully was it put in, was soon under it. The fingers were then raised until, with almost incredible gentleness, their points touched the trout's stomach, when a slight oscillation was commenced. This was the tickling! part of the maneuver. The boys thought the trout enjoyed it, but perhaps they supposed that it was only the weeds softly brushing them. Anyhow, it rarely disturbed them, and the hand gradually assumed a surer position, until, with a dexterous movement, swift as the lightning flash, the fish was cast out of the water, generally on the opposite bank. The probability is that the trout so captured is asleep, and, though its eyes are of course open, it can see nothing.

"I have often caught two dozen fine trout in a day after this fashion, and all the time kept a bright lookout that I was not caught myself; and while I was 'tickling' them I was carefully avoiding sportsmen who, not far away, were fruitlessly whipping the stream.

"The bear seems to capture his prey, as it were, by main strength. He just puts his claw under the fish and casts it out. The hook nosed salmon must be a stupid fellow to be so easily taken. The Irish boy has to be more artistic, so, perhaps, he taught the mode . of fishing to the bears."-San Francisco Ex-

Triumph of the Divining Rod.

One of the most recent triumphs of the divining rod in Britain has been at the A'vondale docks. The company owning the docks having received an intimation that an American company proposed establishing a sugar factory near the docks, provided a good water supply could be secured, a certain Mr. Lawrence - who has the reputation of success as a water finder—was engaged to examine the neighboring ground. In this case the rod employed was a piece of spring steel, which was bent to the shape of a horseshoe, as the searcher, holding his elbows close to his sides, began to walk slowly over the field. After a while the steel became so violently agitated, and twisted itself with such force, that one of Mr. Lawrence's fingers was cut. He directed the company to commence boring at the spot thus indicated by the shedding of his blood, and the work was accordingly commenced. At the depth of 107 feet water was struck, and has since flowed at the rate of a thousand gallons per hour.

In New England, also, the location of wells is said to be frequently decided by the aid of the water twig. And moving westward, we are told that the Southern Pacific and Central Pacific railroad companies have, in crossing arid plains, been glad to avail themselves of the services of the divining rod in order to successfully locate their artesian wells, Doubtless ere long this seemingly mysterious power will be scientifically explained. For the present, however, it remains among the number of unfathomed mysteries, of which a few still remain, to puzzle our wisest men and to provoke contemptuous sneers of those who (forgetting how little our great-grandparents knew of the forces of steam and electricity and how certain it is that nature still holds many a secret which science has yet failed to discover) believe that whatever is beyond their own power of understanding must necessarily be foolishness. - Miss Gordon Cumming in The Quiver.

Daniel Webster's Advanced Age. Guest (dining "upstairs" at Revere House to English waiter)-Daniel Webster has dined in this hall. He has made speeches here.

English Waiter (anxious to keep up a pleasant conversation and earn a tip)-Yes, sir; there was some talk of him here this morn-

Guest-Indeed! What was said of him? English Waiter (considerably taken back and exciting the guest's suspicion that his remark had been a bold, venturesome mendacity)-Well, sir, I don't know as I could tell you what was said-but there was some talk of him, sir.

Guest devotes himself to his tenderloin and remains silent.

English Waiter (distressed by the miscarriage of the conversation, starts on a new tack)-Mr. Webster must be getting along pretty well in years now, sir.

Guest ("catches on")-Yes; I shouldn't wonder if he dropped off very soon.

English Waiter (delighted at the auspicious renewal of the conversation)-Yes, sir; yes, sir; all the great men are dropping off nowa-Guest-Have you heard anything recently in regard to Mr. -Webster's health?

English Waiter (doubtfully)-No, sir; nothing except what I see on the bulletin. When I get off at 3 o'clock I will see the bulletins again.

Guest-You must be sure to keep an eye on the bulletin. Mr. Webster is a great man, and his dropping off this year will create a great sensation.

English Waiter-I know it will, sir; I know Waiter scores a tip and guest departs with a beaming countenance, which legitimately accompanies the bestowal of a benefaction. -Boston Post.

Asking for a Light.

Americans abroad who stop people in the streets to ask for a light for their cigars are more or less politely directed to the nearest tobacco shop and advised to buy a box of fuses. This apparent incivility has its merits. At the Cortlandt street ferry, last week, I saw a man with a stump of a cigar importuning strangers for a light. The first stranger gave him a match, which blew out. The second reluctantly handed him a freshly lighted cigar, but the stump was ash-headed and would not take the fire. The third handed over his half smoked weed, shrugged his shoulders and walked off. The applicant had now incommoded three persons and spoiled two good cigars. Yet, as he juffed away contentedly at his stump, he doubtless four bottles cured me. I cannot praise this world. Toll a gentleman.—New York remedy too much." John H. Rivers, Ort
