HE'S COMING AMONGST US

THE KIND OF A CLERGYMAN CHAL-MERS! CHURCH GETS.

Farewelling in Perth-Rev. Mr. McGillivary Speaks of His Past Labours-He Makes Some Statements That Shows the Integrity of the Man-Will be Welcomed Here. Rev. M. McGillivary, of Perth, who has accepted the call to Chalmers' church, Kings: ton, delivered an impressive farewell se mon in Perth. He gave the following as result of six years' work : That the church membership had increased from 180 to 351 that the total added to the roll was 266. The prayer meeting had risen from an average of 12 to an average of 75; Sabbath school and bible classes from a roll of 120 to 200; giving to christian work from $388 in 1882, to $1,100 last year. Then he added "For the future, I hope your labours and your gifts may be more exenly distributed, and if so, the increased volume of results will astonish you.

Before we part, I desire to express my deep sense of your unvarying kindness to my family and myself. Just now I hear only of words of good-will and appreciation along with your regrets that I have found it my duty to withdraw from a field where we have spent six extremely happy years. From this time our interest in your wellbeing cannot, in the nature of tungs, be an active one, but the pleasant memories we carry along with us, will make it impossible

Rev Mr. McGillivary made special mention of the debt of gratitude he owed to the office-bearers of the church. They were agreeable, courteous men, and never had he heard an irritating or unpleasant word at their meetings. The managers were active, busy men, who gave time and attention to church work even to their own detriment. They were always ready to hear proposals and as liberal and generous as prudence would permit. Then he said : "As a minister of the gospel I have tried to be ever faithful, doing my best to feed the whole flock. I have made a conscientious effort to meet the varying needs of men. My aim has been to impart a pure, healthy gospel, and build upon that foundation, a highminded, pure, generous manhood, keeping before you Christ and Him crucified, as the wisdom of God and the power of God unto salvation to all them that believe. Your welfare has been a subject of deep solicitude to me. I have endeavored to understand your difficulties in order in some slight degree to share your burden; your sorrows, if possible to make them higher; your successes, if possible to moderate the joys of the world, and keep the heart untarnished. At the bed of death, the most trying of all a minister's experience, at the open grave, in the desolate home when the hearts feels broken, I have tried in my feeble way to be a messenger from the God of peace and com-

"In the presence of the aged I have tried to combine the respectfulness of a son with the faithfulness of Christ's servant, to keep up a sympathetic connection between hearts beginning to feel isolated and solitary, and the younger, throbbing life-stream all around them, chiefly to remind them that "at evening time it shall be light," and that in hea ven there will be neither youth nor age, but all will be as the angels of God.

"The welfare of the young I have had very near my heart. I love to work among the young men, and am never happier than when speaking to my young friends of the bible class about the true manliness that Christ alone can give.

"As a citizen I have given some attention to the duties I owed this town and its people. I hope I have contributed something to its social, educational, and moral wellbeing. In all instances I have tried to live so that whatever good my exemple might sio it would never corrupt or wrong anybody. Truthfulness, a pure life, and honorable business relationships I have kept constantly before me. To the promotion of temperance habits in the community I have given some time and attention. The cause is weak here. The town is lying at present under unspeakable disgrace. Law appears to have no sacredness in the eyes of the people, and the weak and tempted are left to the ravages of the greatest scourge of modern civilization. Perhaps when the demon that it creates stalks into men's own homes, they will come to themselves, and see things as they are. Had every citizen done as I have during my residence here, Perth today would be the soberest town on the face of the planet. I surely believe that a better time is coming. On all questions of public interest I have held, and do now hold, positive enough opinions, but in the expression of these opinions have studied that moderation of speech and that respect for the convictions of others which should be expected of a christian and a gentleman, but I am not sanguine enough to believe that I have always been successful in pleasing either others or myself in these respects.

"I sympathize with you in the circumstances in which you find yourselves to-day. I feel with you deeply. Yet so far as I know, you were never in a better condition to stand the strain. To be sure, you will need to exercise watchfulness, diligence and prudence to protect yourselves from all possible inside and outside hurt, but I apprehend no trouble in that way. A little time will enable you to adjust yourselves to the change. You remember that the disappointment of Israel at Marah's bitter waters was very brief. In a little while the sweet wells, and the shady palms of Elim rose in sight, and then came the quails and the manna. A man of God will come, take up the work where I leave off, and carry it on to a volume and strength which I could never hope to reach. The voice of duty bids me leave, and the same sovereign voice will bid him come, and the latter shall be better than the former days.

"And were I asked what you should now do, I would, and without the least hesitation, say, just adopt the planthat Chalmers' church, Kingston, followed, and put it into execution as speedily as possible as possible. No one congregation has an indefeasible claim to the services of any minister, and if in any special sense God has honored him in his work, all the more reason why different places in succession should share in the benefits of it. "If I can render you any service, lay your commands upon me. If any word or message from me can do you good, or give awaiting discharge. There is a lack of you comfort, let me know, and I shall deem it a sacred privilege to respond. We will come back to Perth sometimes. Our dead is sleeping with yours in Elmwood, and we will come back as we have the opportunity to plant a floweret on the little grave. So we shall see each other sometimes."

WHERE TO SPEND A DAY.

Fourteen Island Lake a Fine Place to Recruit. The Way to Get There.

VERONA, Aug. 9. - (To the Editor) : Any one fond of diversion, that does not fear a little exertion, would do well to follow in the footsteps of a party that one day fast week resolved themselves into a committee of the whole bent on a day's sport. We were six, and having everything in readiness the night before left Verona and its sleeping inhabitants in the early morning. . short pull took us across Rock Lake into Mud Creek. Here the oars had to be unshipped, owing to the narrowness of the stream, and used as poles while one in the stern wielded the paddle in true aboriginal style. Through Mud Creek into Mud Lake, thence through Spring Lake Creek into Spring Lake, brought us, after a short pull, to Storms' Point, where a halt was called for breakfast. We had two veteran cooks along, and a full supply of the necessaries, for "rish soup.". Breakfast over away we go just taking Polatoga Creek and Polatoga Lake. This lake derives its name from the presence in the immediate vicinity of certain universal springs, which in days agone were known as the Polatoga Springs. Wonderful are the cures reported from drinking and bathing in these waters, and we almost decided to erect a summer hotel right there and give the suffering public a chance to bathe and be comforted with nature's own remedy, but we decided to go fishing first and so forward we moved to Fourteen Island Creek, made a short portage over Conway's dam, and we were into Fourteen Island Lake, which, being our to forget St. Andrew's church and people," | objective point, the boats separated to meet at noon on one of the Fourteen Islands known to the veterans. We trolled and fished, and fished and smoked, and got lazy and "pulled for the shore," where we lay in the cool shade and communed with nature until the arrival of the other boat. Then the veteran cooks spread themselves for dinner and it laid over anything I ever tasted. Out in the open air, cool, breezy and shaded, only a trial can convince what an appetite one has and how good everthing seems to the taste. I am quite sure that we six stowed more provision at that one meal than we usually would at three. It was my first trip and I expressed a conviction at the conclusion of the meal that I would not want any more that day, nor perhaps for a week, but, the old veteran shook his head saying: "Why you've never been thar before; you'll be just as keen when supper time comes as if you hadn't tasted grub for a fortnight." The veteran's prediction was verified. We were not prepared to do much fishing, but were just out for a good time and get away from the dust and heat. After a couple of hours in the shade some of us went out to capture some fish to take home. We stayed out till six o'clock and secured a fine lot of bass, some of them weighing over five pounds. We supped and started for home, ran the creeks and lakes, safely touching home plate about 8:20 p.m. It was a little too much like work getting up and down the creeks, as in some places water is shallow, but I am ready to brave

Voting Whether the Water Works Shall be Bought-Monopoly Manifesto.

The citizens are voting on the water works by law to-day, and not a few aldermen are sanguine that it will be carried. lesterday afternoon the aldermen met and decided to work systematically in order to secure the passage of the by-law. They claimed, however, no personal interest in the matter, further than to strangle a strong monopoly and secure needed public ad vantages.

At nine o'clock the polls were opened, one in each ward. The city had its scrutineers ready, and they speedily began to check off the voters as they came up. The company had neglected to have its scrutineers sworn in by the mayor, but, nevertheless they were allowed to act, the city not desiring to offer any opposition to a rival though it acted illegally.

There were all sorts of roorbacks afloat, but they were, in nearly all instances, safely combatted. Yesterday afternoon a wonderful circular appeared on the streets, signed by Peter R. Hendersong, Armstrong McCormack, O. S. Strange, M.D., George M. Wilkinson, John Breden and James Richardson. It no sooner got into circulation that the supporters of the by-law found it to be the best possible drawing card in their favor. "The thought of such monopolists as these men are, is sufficient to drive every elector to vote for the by-law," said one. It was said that signers of the circular were stockholders, and as such were not inclined to let go a good thing. But the monopoly manifesto was not allowed to go unanswered. This morning another circular was distributed in answer to it. It opened thus:

"The monopolist water works company, in their desire to retain their grip on the throat of the consumer, and for the purpose of preventing the city from acquiring control of the water system on favourable terms, has had a circular issued by some of their friends-well known champions of the poor-ludicrously misrepresenting the facts of the case. Let us prick a few of their bubbles." And thus proceeded with showing that the city will reap a decided advantage by the purchase.

Quite a number of ladies voted for the by-law. At three o'clock the opponents of the bill were satisfied that it would be carried by a large majority.

THE BAY ATTRACTIONS.

A ROUTE THAT IS NOT OFTEN EN-OUGH TRAVERSED NOW.

The Resorts Up the Quinte-The Number, of Visitors at the Sand Banks - The Scenery and the Fishing Unsurpassed-How Some People Are Enjoying Themselves. Judging from the numerous excursions which leave Kingston for the Thousand Islands your citizens are keenly alive to the scenery and the advantages to be derived from occasional outings, as well as the short respites from the cares and anxieties of every day life in the city. But why the great majority of these pleasure trips should be confined even to that far-famed locality is not quite so easily understood by us, unless, indeed, it is because the distance is less, and it affords an earlier return in the evening. A sail up the Bay of Quinte occasionally would be equally pleasant, especially as it is nearly all, land-locked after passing the Brothers' islands, and, as a consequence, is generally nearly, if not quite as calm and placed as the river; yet how few from your city make this trip, and visit the pleasure resorts of Prince Edward, including the Long Reach, a magnificent stretch of water, with its almost perpendicular shore on the one hand and the slightly undulating plain on the other, into which run various creeks, or bays, navigable only to the smaller craft. Here is excellent fishing, and, at certain seasons of the year, hunting. Entering this stretch of water from the south, and within a few hundred yards of the main land on the right is situated Davy's Island, one of the most enjoyable places on the whole bay on which to pitch your tent. Glenora, or Lake on the Mountain, is also a beautiful spot, being nearly 200 feet above the bay level. From this altitude visitors can get such a view of the scenery for miles around as can hardly fail to interest them, aside from the natural wonder of the situation of the lake itself, which Mr. Wilson utilizes to some extent in driving the machinery of the various mills and foundries situated at the base of the mountain. Here is also situated the Glen House, which is generally filled with Americans, who usually bespeak quarters. Then the entrance to Picton harbor is not less pleasing and attractive to the visitor for the first time. The most popular place in the vicinity of l'icton, is, however, the Sand Banks, distant some ten miles to the south-west, and is approached by three separate drives from the town, all of which pass through a nice section of country, richly studded with substantial farm houses. The roads are also level and in good repair, and tall maple trees line the street on either side for much of the distance. The banks of sand, which are as pure and white as the margin of the paper from which one reads extend over a distance of about five miles, varying in width from a few leet to threequarters of a mile, while some of them rise to between 180 and 190 feet above the level of the lake, which stretches out to the west and south as far as the eye can see. To the right or north the village of Wellington presents a pretty view, as the distant church spires glisten in the sunlight, while, almost in a direct line, west, the eye rests on the Scotch Bennet light house, Nicholson's Island, Presque Isle, or may hap on some passing vessel or steamer. The air is pure, the water clear and blue, and on a calm day, the scene is picturesque and almost indescribably lovely. There are now between ninety and a hundred guests at the house, which is situated on the lake shore in the midst of a beautiful grove, and the proprietors have been forced to refuse many families because of insufficient accommodation. Anyone having the time to spare, and desiring a nice camping spot where good fishing grounds are accessible, cannot do bet-

Why He Lost the Race. Captain Ames, of the yacht Merle, has returned to Oswego, and as an excuse that his boat was defeated said: "The course at Kingston was a very poor one and the captain of the Iolanthe, because of his familiarity with it, was able to get a 'slant' on the Merle several times. The Merle struck on shoals twice, and, considering the circumstances against which she contended, made a good showing. She will not sail in the Belleville race." The course is the same over which regattas have been conducted for the past fifteen years. It is the best course of any sheltered waters.

The Church Conversazione,

A very pleasant time was spent at the conversazione in the Fourth Methodist church last evening. The basement was nearly filled. The programme was a good one throughout, and elicited much applause. The orchestra consisting of five pieces and the organ, played four selections of very sweet music. Miss Jessie Meek played the organ; Miss Jones, niece of the pastor, the cornet; Mr. Henri and Miss Telgmann the violins; H. Wilson the clarionet; and H. W. Wilson the base violin.

The others who contributed to the programme were Miss L. Sissons, with a recitation; N. Raymond, a recitation; Mrs. Coward, song; and the church choir. Rev. Mr. Whiting, chairman of the district, made a few pointed remarks. The choir closed with "Home, Sweet Home." Ice cream was served during the evening.
