AND THE PEOPLE ON THE STEAM ER MAUD FELT SO.

A Delightful Trip Down the Liver on Saturday Night-The Illuminations on a Grand Scale - More to Follow This Week.

The Maud, as an excursion boat, possesses an unwaning popularity. Who would have thought that on Saturday she could have made two trips down the river, taking each time nearly as many as she could carry, and returning them to the city delighted! Yet such is the record. The steamer covered the usual course in the afternoon, returning alightly earlier than usual, at 6:30 o'clock. At 7 o'clock she set out again for a tour among the islands, with a special view to giving the excursionists a glimpse of the illuminations. An hour later and the shades of evening had fallen. Pre sently the moon arose and cast a soft and silvery light upon the water. As the Maud sped along her winding channel and through varied scenes the passengers felt the pleasure of the outing to be unspeakably great. Round Island was the first great attraction in the way of illumination, and the private residences and hotel were beautifully lit up. Four strings of colored lights ran from the top of the tower, across the roof of the hotel in different directions and to the ground. At the east end of the island there was a fine. Only an occasional light was visable. The disappointment of the harpers, who were to be on board and failed to connect, was keenly felt in the last two hours of the homeward journey. But it will not be felt again. The steward served coffee and sandwiches to those who desired them, and pale Luna shone until about l o'clock. Next week there will be moonlight throughout the night, and fittingly so for the excursions which the Folgers will be sure to run in connection with the special display of lights, shore fires, and pyrotechnics which, at immense cost, occurs on Wednesday, Thursday and Friday evening. They will be participated in by all in possession of the islands.

AN INTERESTING CASE.

Sailors Charged With Violating the Law-A Document Improperty Made Out.

Masters, mates, sailors and cabin boys were in attendance at the police court this morning. It was quite evident there was a rousing case on the docket, as lawyers and captains were in constant consultation. Soon it developed that there was trouble between sailors and Capt. A. Welch, of the schr. Neelon, and Capt. R. Reid, of the schr. T. R. Merritt.

Seven sailors were languishing in the police cells and they had not been arrested on a warrant either. They were run in by order of the masters, who claimed that Messrs. Dandy, E. Mulleen, S. Shaughrau, G. Davis, Labore Turcotte, Dexter Eves and W. Graham had signed documents binding them to work on the boats for $1.25 per day. After doing this the men, regretting their agreement, would not ship. Then they were arrested under the Canada seaman's act.

After considerable deliberation the case was brought on, and J. Shaughrau was experimented upon. On hearing the charge he pleaded not guilty, and said that one of the erafts was unfit for sailors to sleep on. J. McIntyre defended the prisoners and said it was an extraordinary procedure to arrest the men without a warrant. He did not know, however, whether the detence really intended to proceed against the prisoners, or against only one man. The magistrate replied that one man would be tried first.

Mr. McIntyre said the sailors had good reasons for refusing to go on the boats. One of them, especially, was not seaworthy. Capt. Welch-"Do you mean that my boat is not seaworthy. If you do I want to differ with you?"

The evidence of Capt. Welch was heard. He said the schr. Neelon was one of the prop. Tilley's tow. He engaged Shaughrau to work on the vessel, under an agreement for a round trip between Kingston and Duluth. After he had signed, the prisoner accompanied other men to the forecastle. The captain went to Davis and told him that as he had shipped on the schr. Merritt, he would not be employed on the Neelon. When his companions learned that he would not be hired they struck and would not work unless Davis was engaged.

Mr. McIntyre had the document, signed by the sailors, produced and he claimed it was unfairly made out. It was not drawn up in accordance with the act. Mr. Whiting, for the defence, admitted that the document was not perfect. The magistrate then summarily dismissed the case.

Mr. McIntyre asked for $80 penalty for false imprisonment. His demand was in accordance with the Act, but he did not press and when the Park Nine gained a lead and kept there nearly one thousand people yelled themselves hoarse.

W. Callihan pitched for the Parks, and did telling work. Reardon, whose fame as a pitcher has been heralded far and near, occupied the box for Pelleville, and proved to the satisfaction of the spectators that he is not what he was cracked up to be. He is not in any respect as good a pitcher as Mc-Nichol, who worked for the visitors during August.

The Parks found him easily and batted him hard.

The fielding of the Bellevilles was only fair, but numerous hard catches were accomplished.

David Mills was chosen umpire, and, with considerable delicacy, accepted and the highly undesirable position. His decisions were disputed at times, but they were in the eyes of the majority of the spectators, fair. Twenty minutes past four o'clock the man. Farrel eventually died at the plate. Everybody cheered when this occurred, but the excitement subsided when Dyson, sent a ball whizzing to the roof of a shed far off. A boy, sitting on the building, stopped it or Dyson would have secured a home run, as it was he only got two bases. Gilman took advantage of the fun and came home.
