Lindley's Second Night And a Good Play -Humor And Pathos Intermixed.

more enthusiastic audience seldom greets a company than that of last evening. We, however, think that a play of such decided merit deserves a better nomenclature than that accorded to it. "Calamity Jane" has a peculiar suggestiveness of gun and pistol, red fire and tomahawks, whilst in reality it is a good story, replete with interest, effective tableaux, and terse vigorous language, occasionally poetic. The opening with its horses, dogs and road agents, together with good vocal music, started the play well, whilst in good marching order followed Lindley, as a negro of the funniest type, scene after scene of sensationalism and a climax as dramatic as could be wished for. Miss Flint, as the heroine, gave a happy blending of humour and pathos, and, unlike most western prototypes of this character, avoided the slang usually given by artistes of the M'liss type. Mr. Chapman, as "Dakota Dick," was forcible, and Messrs. Secord, Stanley and Marsden, made most of their opportunities. Mr. Walters, as a Dutchman, was boisterously humorous, and Miss Stanley must be awarded praise for a very womanly rendition of the persecuted wife. To-night a new play to our citizens is presented, entitled "A Block Game," wherein Mr. Lindley appears as "Skip," a negro fireman, and in which mirth runs riot which will doubtless be a bonne bouche for our visitors. There will be a "Vigilantes" matinee on Saturday afternoon. The wonderful child artiste appears in every perform-

THE AMERICA'S CUP IS LIKELY TO REMAIN IN AMERICA

The Thistle Beaten From the Start-The Wind Variable All Through the Race-The Result is Disappointing to the Old Country Folks,

NEW YORK, Sept. 27. -The Electra dropped anchor and swung to the ebb tide for to-day's yacht race a cable's length to the west-ward of buoy 18 at 9:15, with the scoretary of the navy's blue flag flying at her main truck. The Thistle was already under way, standing slowly across the upper bay, on the port tack, her immense sprit topsail reaching far up into the haze aloft. Captain Barr was at the tiller, and close behind him, clad in spotless white flannel yachting suit, stood James Bell, the Thistle's chief owner. About the deck were his guests and co-workers, Sir Donald Matherson, Charles and Anderson Coates, Designer Watson, and Lathan A Fisk, the latter being General Paine's representative. Every passing steamer saluted and its passengers cheered. Th wind was so light that to stem the tide the Thistle had to anchor at 9:40

The Volunteer towed out from Bay Ridge soon after, looking every inch a fighting craft, and Captain Haff, to save time and patience, anchored the sloop near the This-

At 12 o'clock a breeze from the north-east came with the first of the flood tide, rippling the waters of the bay, and gladdening the hearts of the waiting thousands whose patience was well nigh exhausted. The preparative gun was fired from the flagship at 12:20, and then there was a great scurrying of steamboats to clear a space for the yachts to start.

The Thistle got under way first, and she astonished the spectators by the way she slipped through the water with scarcely any wind, Captain Barr steering her shrough a perfect mesh of steamboats. Ten minutes was allowed between the first gun and the one to start, and when, at 12:30, that was given, the Thistle had just secured a weather position, close under the Long Island shore. She was on the port tack close hauled with the Volunteer three lengths astern on the lee quarter.

Down they came for the imaginary line drawn between the Electra and buoy 18, both carrying exactly the same sail, main sail, club topsail, forestay sail, jib and jib

Captain Barr, at the Thistle's long letter, shot the cutter over the line first at 12:33:06, the Volunteer following under Capt. Hafis skillful guidance at 12:34:581. 'One minute and 52; seconds between them at the starts: how much at the finish?" queried an

It was impossible to see the narrows because of the fleet of steamers and sailing craft, but the yachts worked down against the flood tide cleverly.

At 12:39 the Thistle tacked to the starboard, and a minute later the Volunteer went about, the cutter following sait at of Holy Trinity, assuming the pulpit. It is once to try and prevent Capt. Half from crossing his bow, for the white sloop had been catching her from the start. Another minute and the shout went up, "We've got her" on board the Electra, as both tacked again and the Volunteer was seen to be on the cutter's weather quarter, and so it was. Elisworth had "out-generaled" Capt. Barr in the first ten minutes. On they went for the narrows, the leach of the cutter's mainsail flapping all the time, and, in spite of all the "pinching" her skipper could do, the Volunteer steadily drew away from her, both running a gauntlet of steamboats that persistently remained in the channel in spite of the repeated warn ings from the Electra and the police boat

Four tacks brought both clear of the narrows, the Volunteer passing Fort La Fayette at 1 p.m. and the Thistle at 1:05. Guns from the fort boomed out their salutes as they passed. Off Coney Island point at 1:22 the Volunteer had gained a lead of fully a mile. The wind was light and variable, and at times the Thistle lay becalmed, while the Boston sloop forged ahead, Captain Haff seeming to steer her where the puffs came oftenest.

At 1:33 the Volunteer went about, and in 4 mins, round she came again, nolding on to this tack (starboard) for 22 minutes before coming round again. Then she was over a mile in the lead.

southeast and was "breezing up" a little. Like an arrow she slipped away for buoy 10, luffing around it amid a pandemonium of steamer whistles and cheers.

At 2:21:03 the time taken at buoy 81 and 25 minutes ahead of the Cyprus. southward sprit, was: Volunteer 2:27:45; Thistle 2:36:45.

From here to the lightship the Volunteer walked right along at a rattling gait, increasing her lead till when off buoy, she was two miles ahead. The Thistle was badly handicapped in this reach by the back wash from the steamers, which was rendered doubly bad by the flood-tide setting against

The lightship was turned as follows: Volunteer 3:43:12; Thistle 4:01:15.

With booms to starboard the Volunteer came swiftly back to the Hook and had almost reached the buoy before her rival had rounded the lightship. It was a procession now not a race. The Volunteer rounded buoy 84 at 2:35,30, gybed to port, and set her spinnaker to starboard amid another deafening chorus of whistles, accompanied by nearly 500 vessels. The Boston sloop swept majestically down to the finish, at buoy 15, between two long lines of craft, reaching from buoy 10 to the narrows.

The following shows the actual results:

owner of the Thistle, said he was not satistied with the result. The Thistle, he declared, had never moved so slowly through the water. He was of the opinion that there was "something wrong with the cutter's bottom," and she would be hauled out of the water to morrow, with a view toward finding what it was. He did not consider that a race had been sailed for that reason, and because the wind was shifting. The Volunteer often had the advantage of a breeze that the Thistle did not feel. Besi les, the excursion boats swashed the Thistle to a damaging exsame views. He said that some of the crew had been notified anonymously that the cutter's bottom had been ''doctored," and the truth would be ascertained before Thursday, the day of the race. Captain Barr said he had sailed the Thistle every time she had been out; and he never knew her to move so badly on the wind. General Paine and Mr. Edward Burgess of the Volunteer took the victory quietly, but very happily. Captain Haff said that the reason that the Thistle sailed so much faster before the start was that the Volunteer did, not have her center board down on account of shallow water inside of buoy Criticism of the Press. NEW YORK, Sept. 28 .- The Heraid says 'It appears to us that the race yesterday was sailed fairly and squarely as any race could be sailed. The course was not clear because a clear course with so many accompanying yachts would have been a physical impossibility. Both boats suffered from crowding, but in the opinion of impartial observers each suffered equally. The Thistle got the best of the start, but falling astern her progress was slightly impeded by the pursuing and overtaking excursion steamers. After this first blow of the race, however, she had no reason to complain, for all the fleet flocked round the Volunteer, and the Mohican alone was left to convey the Thistle on her rather lonely way. We entertain a sincere belief that the Thistle people have undervalued the ability of the Volunteer, and perhaps this may be more fully demonstrated in the outside races." The Tribune says: "If the America's cup is ever to go back to the country from which it was originally captured, 37 years ago, apparently a fleeter boat than the Thistle must come and take it. Her defeat yesterday was severer than that received by the Genesta, although the weather that prevailed was just what she bargained for and what she was supposed to desire. Her superiority in light winds was regarded as established. But from the moment she made that surprising tack in-shore until the Volunteer came up at Fort Wadsworth at the finish the honors of the race were all with the sloop. The Thistle is clearly no match for the Volunteer in windward work. She must be numbered among the other victims of Mr. Burgess' amazing skill in modelling crafts that skim along in the teeth of the wind.

The World says: "No one who saw the race doubts that it demonstrates to a certainty the superiority of the Volunteer over her rival. All the drawbacks the Thistle encountered could not have made many minutes' difference in the result."

The Times says: "The Thistle was interfered with by the steamers yesterday, but that she was no match for the Volunteer in the light! breeze was clearly shown when they were under the same conditions, and when neither was crowded."

London Press Opinicus.

Feeling on the Clyde

LONDON, Sept. 28.—The yachtsmen of the Clyde are astounded at the result of yesterday's contest between the Thistle and Volunteer, and the majority are despondent respecting the result of the series of races. Many blame Capt. Barr, of the Thistle, for standing in too close to land and reason that it was by doing so he lost yesterday's race. Capt. Campbell, of the yacht Silene, says he remains hopeful of the result and claims that the Thistle's best chances are in the outside or occan races.

The yacht White Wings, of Hamilton, in winning the race off Teronto on Saturday. won the Murray cup, valued at $500, the championship flag of the Toronto Yacht club, and $15 in cash. MONTREAL, Sept. 28. - The Hochelaga contested election case was called before Mr. Justice Loranger. Several witnesses were examined, and testified that they had been intimidated and coerced into veting for Mr. Villeneave, the sitting member for the county. The most important witness, however, was Mr. Chas. Champagne, who successfully contested the county with the respondent. He deposed that before the election in question he had been in the Richelieu hotel taking a drink when Mr. Durocher, the proprietor, came to his side and said he wished to talk with him. He then conducted witness to a private apartment where he met Senator E.A. Senecal, president of the Ontario and Richelieu Co.
