WOMAN AND HOME.

her walk for "fresh air and exercise" tired through and through, and is the worse for it, because she has lifted and carried hundreds of pounds.
 Stand at any city street corner and watch the women as they pass. How tired they look! How their dresses flap around them. Contrast them with men. Men's feet lift no weight of clothes. Men's steps contend with nothing. Every muscle has its natural exercise. Outdoor air and exercise are good for them.—Herald of Health.

Where to Look for Fashions.

If it were necessary for American women to look to foreigners for their fashions they might much better go a little farther south, across the Pyrenees. The women of Spain have a world wide reputation for the grace and loveliness of their dress. Why is it we have never attempted to copy them? Artists love to paint their graceful mantillas and flowing veils of lace—they make such beautiful pictures, and yet we ignore them, and cling to gaudy Paris. We see this same flowing drapery which the Spanish women love, in the costumes of our actresses. They make a study of artistic effects, and we go wild with admiration over the results. Why should we consider such dresses, made more plainly, of course, and of sober colors, out of place in the house or the street? Only because custom has blinded our eyes. Let us take off the veil for a minute, and calmly compare the stiff, contorted, immodest figures of the fashion plate with the graceful, flowing drapery that could so easily be substituted.—Dress.

Wasting Soap.

There is great waste in soap through leaving the cake in the tub or pail, instead of laying it aside after making a strong lather. I would like to see a statue raised to honor a domestic wise or thoughtful enough to lay soap back in its place, instead of leaving it to soften in the water. Besides deserving it, she would be an example to others. If there be such an one I have never seen her. And a cake of soap softened by being soaked is good for little afterward. It wastes away as a dollar does when changed into pennies.
 Soap is also wasted on paint. A little ammonia in the cleaning water, or whitening on a damp cloth will clean wool much easier, and leave no yellow stain to tell of its abuse.—Hester M. Poole in Good Housekeeping.

Infant Diarrhoea Contagious

Infants have green diarrhoea, so called from the color of the intestinal discharges. There is some reason for the belief that the affection is contagious and is transmissible from a diseased to a healthy child brought within its influence. M. Hayem and M. Lesage, his interne, have succeeded in proving that the green color of the stools was due to a special bacillus, the penetration of which into the system and the intestine may be recognized by the phenomena of green diarrhoea.—Herald of Health.

Tomatoes in Turkey.

To preserve tomatoes for winter use the Turks mash them through colanders and then throw salt in, which causes the pulp to settle, and they are put in bags and the water is left to drain away. The pulp is then dried in the shade spread on flat surfaces, and when dry it is cut in small cakes and laid carefully in jars, which are covered. This pulp retains the taste and qualities of the tomato better than canning does.—Olive Harper in Kansas City Times.

Howells on Girlhood.

Mr. Howells has summed up one sort of girlhood neatly and severely. "Girlhood," he says, "is often a turmoil of wild impulses, ignorant exaltations, mistaken ideals, which really represent no intelligent purpose, and come from disordered nerves, ill advised reading and the erroneous perspective of inexperience."

To prevent a felon, take a cup of cold water, put into it a teaspoonful of saleratus, set it on the stove, put the finger threatened with the felon into the cold water and keep it there until it is so hot you cannot bear it and the felon is killed.

The mixture of the yolk of an egg and glycerine is said to be an excellent remedy for burns. Put equal parts of each into a bottle and keep tightly corked. It will keep some time if put in a cool place. Shake each time before applying.

Sleeplessness at night is often caused by the air of the room having become close and vitiated. If you cannot sleep and your windows are closed, trying opening a window. In many cases sleep will immediately follow.

Beets are nice in mince pies when apples are scarce or dear. Boil, peel, chop fine, let stand half an hour covered with sharp vinegar and then use like apples. Strong coffee is also a nice addition.

Do not let growing children wear shoes with high heels; it is better for them to wear none at all, or only such an increase of thickness as is seen at the heels of commonsense flat soled shoes.

At Newport they serve baked stuffed tomatoes for breakfast and eat currant jelly on dry toast, possibly for the same reason that a cheap Englishman calls a cab a "keb."

"Salad eggs" are hard boiled, then cut in two, and the yellow mixed with mustard, pepper, herbs, vinegar and salt, and then served cold.

Always have three or four bricks about the house, neatly covered with carpet, for placing against the doors to keep them open.

To scour knives easily, mix a small quantity of baking soda with your brickdust, and see if your knives do not polish better.

Disease often lurks in a dirty dishcloth, a greasy sink, an unclean tea kettle and a poorly ventilated oven.

Dusting cloths must be washed often or they will carry more dirt into the rooms than they take out.

A severe but sure cure for corns is said to be crocote. Wet the corns several nights in succession.

Between the hotel squash and pumpkin pie there is rarely any difference and no distinction.

For coffee stains put thick glycerine on the wrong side and wash out in lukewarm water.

Flannels should be dried in the shade, and, if possible, ironed while damp.

Wash out oil stains on clothes in cold water; ink stains dip in milk.

Hams can be kept wrapped in paper and packed in a barrel of ashes.

To cure seed warts rub with baking soda. It is a sure cure.

Alum or vinegar will set the colors of red, green or yellow.

CLOTHING THE RESERVES.

A Scene in French Military Life at Toulouse.

All the world knows how successful was the recent mobilization of the troops of France—how quickly the peasant, the clerk and the man of business became well drilled soldiers and the echoes of French exultation thereat have not yet died away. The French illustrated newspapers containing pictures of scenes incident to the mobilization have just reached America, and we here reproduce a characteristic group.

WAITING FOR UNIFORMS.

Habit has a great hold upon men. The reservist finds the supreme moment of distress when he passes from civil to military life. The cut represents some reservists at the fateful moment just previous to donning their uniforms. Having doffed paretots and chapeaux, they see themselves in the military caps and enfolded in the vast capote of the soldier. All distinctions of class indicated by the details of the toilet are effaced. There is no more "monsieur," no more patron, no more workmen. All are sergeants, corporals or soldiers. The speech of the under officers is briefer and more imperious; the faces of the men more reserved. Their ears begin to grow accustomed to the words "consigne," "salle de police."

The reservists, while still in their civil attire, at the clothing magazine, pass under the vigilant eye of a young officer, whose appearance at once shows that he belongs to the active part of the military. Within the great wardrobe room are shelves filled with caps, trousers and all the articles pertaining to a soldier's toilet. They are clothed piece by piece and taken before the captain of the company, who passes judgment on them, for the regiment must look its best in clothes as well as in muscle. Wide arm holes, comfortable sleeves, immense shoes, caps which cover the head and come down close to the ears—these are the dictates of fashion in the army just now. Meantime there are some who have trouble getting anything to cover them. Immense abdomens refuse to hide themselves under any trousers or coat to be found. The owners of these rotund forms are obliged to be left in their civil clothes until the tailor of the regiment builds them garments which will cover their massive proportions. These, for eight days, are privileged characters. They go about and enjoy themselves in the quarters, free from exercise.

At last it is all done. The clothes of the bourgeois, folded and bearing the names of their owners, are put away. They go to drill feeling awkward in the unaccustomed clothing. In a few days all this is effaced, and they almost forget that they ever wore anything but military toggery. After a month when the colonel reviews them, he can honestly felicitate them on their rapid military acquirements.

JEFFERSON'S GRANDDAUGHTER.

Mrs. Septima J. Meikleham and Her Long and Eventful Career.

There was no more delightful conversationalist in Washington than Mrs. Septima or Septimia J. Meikleham, the last surviving granddaughter of Thomas Jefferson, who died at the capital and was buried at New York recently.

Acquainted with the great men and women of the past three generations, she could tell stories by the hour of their personal peculiarities and of her experiences with them. She was a close friend of Dolly Madison, was entertained at the White House when Jackson was president, and filled many a time his corn cob pipe for him. While she was sick in Washington as a young girl Mrs. Madison sat up with her night after night, and it was she whom Jefferson thought most of during his last years as his favorite grandchild, and it was upon her head that his hands rested in his dying moments.

She was the seventh daughter of Martha Jefferson, and was the wife of a distinguished physician whom she married in Cuba. During the greater part of her life she was in comfortable circumstances, but of late years her friends have been trying to get a pension for her of congress. Rich- elien Robinson, the Irish sympathizing congressman from Brooklyn, who was known while in congress as the "Tail Twister of the British Lion," made several unsuccessful attempts to get such a bill through the house. There was much eloquence, and many spread eagle eulogies of Jefferson, but no money was forthcoming, and the last attempt made in congress was during the last session, when a descendant of Alexander Hamilton was among the friends of Mrs. Meikleham in lobbying for the bill. While the bill was discussed during Robinson's congressional career, a citizen of one of the large towns of northern Ohio wrote to Mrs. Meikleham that she might have a home in his house as long as she lived. This letter was published, but Mrs. Meikleham, while she thought the government owed something to her on behalf of the good her grandfather did for the country, was not willing to accept charity from private parties, and she refused it.

She was never, however, in absolute need of life's comforts. For years she lived in Georgetown, and had an old but comfortable house on the heights. Such a cottage would probably rent for $30 a month. She died in one of the best parts of Washington, and the house she occupied during her last years was probably worth $7,000 and would rent for $45. This house she rented, and it was very comfortably furnished, containing among other things many old paintings and some rare pieces of furniture which came down to her from her grandfather. A little black walnut cabinet, which was made by one of Jefferson's slaves, was among her treasures, and she had some of the chairs which came from Monticello, two of which had been used by Louis XVI.
