WHAT SHALL WE WEAR?

ENLARGING DRESSES FOR FAST GROWING CHILDREN.

New York Fashions for Autumn Weddings—Full Descriptions, with Illustrations, for Making a Bride's Toilette and Bridesmaids' Dresses.

The cuts presented in this issue represent New York fashions for autumn weddings as illustrated and described by Harper's Bazar. Ivory white satin, faille française moire antique and soft repped silks are the fabrics of rich wedding gowns prepared for this season. Their trimmings in some instances is lace in flounces of round point or in wide breadths of valenciennes, or of embroidered lisse broad enough to drape the entire front of the skirt. White satin with lace flounces and garniture of lilies of the valley with orange blossoms is the typical gown for a bride whose maids will wear pink rose tulle, making the tableau at the altar white and rose instead of the white and gold groups seen last year.

BRIDE'S TOILETTE.

The bridal gown shown in the first cut is of pearl white soft repped silk trimmed with white lace and a moire sash. The front of the skirt is laid in wide side pleats, and nearly covered by a deep lace apron, which is draped by pleats on the left side; the train is plain and very full. The long pointed corsage is cut square at the top, and opens over a lace plastron gathered above and pleated to a sharp point below; the elbow sleeves are also cut off square near the top, and filled in with lace which falls in a pleated frill below. The collar is made of rows of pearls. The sash of moire ribbon is folded to follow the outlines of the pointed corsage, and falls in loops and fringed ends on the left side. A cluster of orange blossoms is low on the left of the waist, and similar flowers are placed in the folds of the tulle veil, which is long, full, with plain unhemmed edges, and is arranged to leave the face uncovered. White undressed kid gloves, white stockings, and white satin shoes with lace rosettes. Bouquet of orange blossoms.

Bridesmaids' dresses are fashionably made of moire with brocaded stripes and lace. When there are a number of bridesmaids each pair wears a different color. These dresses are made with a short bouffant skirt, lace flounces and a long pointed waist, with Pompadour square neck and elbow sleeves; a small hat of lace and a basket of flowers carried in the hand complete these Dresden china toilettes. White moire basques with lace skirts and moire sashes will also be worn by bridesmaids. A group of six bridesmaids have chosen Suede colored China silk for three dresses and heliotrope silk for the other three. Pretty dresses of white nuns' veiling with full vests of Alencon lace have revers of white moire and moire straps fastened by gold buckles; with these are stringless bonnets of lace, with gold quills thrust through a large bow of white moire ribbon; the bouquets are of blush roses and maidenhair ferns. A pretty and simple dress for a maid of honor, or for several bridesmaids, is of white satin surah, with a very full short skirt, shirred at the top and not trimmed otherwise. The full gathered waist has a sash of white moire ribbon tied behind, and the bouquet worn in the corsage is of yellow roses. A short tulle veil falls just below the waist. Bridesmaids wear tan colored Suede gloves, with slippers of the same tan kid and stockings to match; these complete dresses of any color as well as white toilettes.

BRIDESMAIDS' DRESS.

The bridesmaid's dress represented in the cut is of white Bengaline and Valenciennes lace. The skirt is trimmed with lace, a ruche of pinked moire around the foot and a sash of moire ribbon. The long waisted bodice is made high about the neck and has a full lace vest with revers on each side and a bow of moire ribbon on the top. The short tulle veil is fastened by a cluster of white flowers. Long gloves and slippers of tan colored undressed kid, with silk stockings of the same shade.

How to Enlarge Children's Dresses.
 Mothers complain of not knowing how to enlarge girl's dresses when they grow rapidly, yet we think this cannot be so difficult a task with the prevailing fashion of open bodices with a colored plastron of another material. Pleated plastrons are often carried to the waist on pointed bodices, and an answering trimming added to the front of the skirt, or the fronts of a bodice that is too narrow may be turned back above, lined with a different hue, and a gauged stripe set on from the revers to the waist; these, however, should be edged with the material of which the skirt is composed to give a tasteful effect. A tucked chemise of muslin, tulle or etamine in white or cream should finish off such a dress. The back and front of a yoke grown too small may be enlarged by setting in four stripes of any pretty material, one down the front, a second and third round the arm holes and the fourth down the back.

ALL AROUND THE HOUSE.

Suggestions About Hard Wood Floors.

How to Serve a Fashionable Dinner.
 Increasing care and elaborateness in the serving of meals marks the American household of today, and many styles of dishes and plates are thus brought into requisition. Formerly the whole dinner set was alike in shape and decoration, and meats and other dishes were served entire upon the table. A fashionable dinner is now served in courses with a separate design and style of plate for each course, the decoration being usually suggestive of the course to be served. No dishes are set upon the table. The carving is done by the butler and the dishes served direct to the guests.

The order in serving a dinner of courses is usually as follows:

Oysters, soups, fish, entree, roast, game, salad, dessert, cream, coffee. Oysters are served on plates for the purpose. Five oysters is the usual number. Soup is served in a deep plate resting upon a flat plate, both of which are served and removed together. Fish plates are beautifully decorated with suggestive designs of different species of fish, coral, marine plants, etc.; a small crescent shaped plate for the fish bones accompanies these. The entree plate is small and highly decorated. For the roast the plate is of largest size and flat. Plaque shaped plates are much used for the dessert. Ice cream is served in cut glass dishes.
 Heavy cut glass now represents the most elegant of fine glass for the table and is used for a variety of pieces, including the salad bowls, individual pepper and salts, bonbon dishes in odd shapes of leaves, crescents, etc., as well as finger bowls, decanters and wine glasses. In fact the glass is quite as important an item in the artistically decorated table as the china.

A New Method of Keeping Plums.

An easy way of keeping plums that are firm and not over ripe is to cut out the stones, drain on cheese cloth and pack in dry sugar. Put a two inch layer of sugar in the jar, then one layer of plums; cover an inch deep with sugar, then another layer of plums, and so on till the jar is filled, the top being sugar. Cover with cloth and a stone lid for a week or more and fill up with sugar as the fruit shrinks. Susan Power, who is authority for the above, says the fruit keeps remarkably.

Hard Wood Floors.

The beauty, cleanliness and healthfulness of hard wood floors have made them popular with all thrifty housewives, and the growing favor with which they are regarded has led to many improvements in their construction. Among drawbacks to the use of these floors has been the readiness to show even moderate wear, such as marks of casters, nails in shoe heels, etc. A remedy to this has been found in using the end of the wood instead of the side for the surface of the blocks, as it has long been known that the fine wearing surface of wood is on the end of the grain.

END WOOD DESIGN FOR A FLOOR.

An end wood design for a square room, reproduced from Decorator and Furnisher, is shown in the cut. Hard wood floors are in use in the finest class of houses, and continued trial only makes their advantages more manifest. Besides their durability, hard wood floors, especially those of end construction, have a beauty of color and grain which recommends them to the eye, and when used in conjunction with a plenitude of rich and heavy rugs they go far towards filling the requirements of a perfect floor.

Apple Pickles.

Peel enough apples to fill a jar of any size you may choose and preparing by the following receipt enough vinegar to cover them, pour it over the apples boiling hot and repeat this three days in succession. If the apples are not clear and tender by that time, turn the whole jarful into a bell metal kettle, and boil until the fruit is sufficiently soft to be readily pierced by a straw. To seven pounds of fruit, which will about fill a gallon jar, put three pounds of brown sugar, one quart of good cider vinegar, a tablespoonful of celery seed, a tablespoonful of powdered cinnamon and half dozen whole cloves.

Green Tomato Pickle.

For an excellent pickle of green tomatoes cut a peck of tomatoes in thin slices, sprinkle with salt, using about two teaspoonfuls, and let stand two days; then drain off the brine, slice a dozen onions thin and mix together a fourth of a pound each of mustard and mustard seed, and an ounce each of ground cloves, allspice and pepper. Put the tomatoes, onions and spices into the preserving kettle, in layers, and cover with good vinegar. Boil slowly half an hour or until the tomato looks clear.

Brandied Fruit.

Peaches and pears for brandying should be peeled and plums pricked to prevent bursting. Make a syrup with three-fourths of a pound of fruit, using a small cupful of water to a pound of sugar, as is preferred, to a pound of fruit, using a small cupful of water to a pound of sugar. Let the syrup come to a boil, put the fruit in and boil five minutes. Remove the fruit carefully and let the syrup boil fifteen minutes longer, or until it thickens well; add one pint of brandy to four pounds of fruit and take the kettle from the fire. Pour the hot syrup over the fruit and seal.

Brown Sauce.

Brown sauce is an important source of savor in the cooking of the cheaper meats, and is greatly relished by all children and many grown people, with potatoes, rice and the like. Now, brown sauce is, in common parlance, a good, brown gravy. A little meat dripping and a little butter are placed over the fire, some flour is stirred in and browned, after which is poured on, a little at a time, enough boiling water to make the gravy, which is boiled and seasoned with salt and pepper.

Chocolate Caramels.

Two cupfuls of New Orleans molasses, two cupfuls of coffee sugar, one cupful of milk, butter the size of an egg, one large cupful of grated chocolate, to be stirred in when the mixture thickens. Flavor with vanilla. Pour on buttered tins and when nearly cool mark off into squares.

Two Points in Preserving.

Fruit that is to be preserved may be kept from turning a dark color by dropping it into cold water as fast as peeled.
 Never let metal touch fruit and handle is as little as possible, is the rule of an authority in all sorts of fruit preserving.
