THREE MIRACLES.

EXPLANATORY NOTES BY REV. GEO. P. HAYES, D. D., LL. D.

Lesson IV of the International Series (Fourth Quarter) for Oct. 23-Text of the Lesson, Matt. ix, 18-31-Golden Text, Matt. 1x, 29.

Vs. 18, 19. Jairus' petition-Jairus had left his child so low that he supposed she was probably already dead. Verses 18 and 19 show that in conduct, if not in words, Jesus promised this ruler of the synagogue to grant his request.

Vs. 20, 21. The woman's faith-A considerable crowd followed the Saviour, and in the midst of that crowd came this woman, hoping not to be known. Whether her attempt at concealment was on account of her peculiar disease, or from uncalled for modesty, or for fear she would not be healed, it is not necessary for us to determine. Whatever was the reason, it seemed insufficient to Christ; and yet not so insufficient as to prevent his healing power over the disease. To the looker on there was no manifestation of the presence of almighty power. When this woman touched the Saviour's garment, her faith is shown in the touch of the hem. In one aspect her faith was very great and in another it was very weak. She seems to have had the impression that his power was a species of magic, and was communicated not by the act of the will, but as if it was a sort of electrical current. Her mental operations seem to have been a strange mixture of faith and superstition and doubt.

V. 22. Her confession-In the fuller accounts of the other two evangelists, Christ made special effort to call attention to her concealment. He was as conscious of the exertion of his power as she was conscious of its effect on her disease. Peter and the other disciples litt'e appreciated this marvelous knowledge of Christ. How the Saviour's questions must have smitten her conscience in her effort at concealment! Vs. 23, 24. Jairus' faith and courage-This delay must have been extremely vexatious to Jairus. Word came that all was lost so far as his case was concerned, and that it was now too late. Jairus had said his daughter was at the point of death, if not already dead. Could Jairus believe now! It was encouraging to find the Saviour not only speaking confidently, but continuing his journey to the house. It was also encouraging, at the house, to have him say, as in verse 24, that the maid was not dead. This suggestion from him was met with scorn. This utterance, however, stopped all suggestions about swooning or fainting or anything of that kind. After she had come to life again, if he had not made that suggestion beforehand, others might have made it afterwards. Now was the time for those to speak who had anything to say against the genuineness of the miracle. Doctors, parents, mourners and all the people knew it was real death.

Vs. 25, 26. Restored-It was only a simple command of Christ, and she rose immediately, well and with a good appetite. She was not restored to life simply, to be left sickly as she had been before, but was wholly

Vs. 27-30. The blind-With all these stories of Christ's cures floating around, of course the blind hear of them. They had no doubt as to the meaning of Christ's miraculous power. It was to them immediate proof of his Messiahship. They did not hesitate to profess their faith in him as the Messiah. That was I

man, these made their confession when they | causes which produce the secular changes in made their prayer; and yet Christ pressed them for an explicit avowal of their faith in his power, and made his blessing measure itself by the fullness of their faith.

Why, in several cases, Christ forbade the proclamation of his miracles is a mystery. He seems very positively and energetically to have forbidden it in the case of these blind men. It is evident that they just as clearly disobeyed his command. He may have forbidden it lest he should be so overpressed with applications for relief as to have no time for preaching the gospel, or to prevent the excited people from taking some public step to proclaim his Messiahship.

SUGGESTIVE APPLICATIONS.

V. 18. Come and lay thy hand upon her-The heavy hand of affliction had been laid upon this poor child. It was the hand of comfort and of healing that the father now obtained by the plants being "disbudded," as wished to be laid upon his child. It was a beautiful and expressive simile borrowed from the habit of priests and holy men laying their hands upon a person in wishing or imparting a blessing. So the father would say by the simile, your blessing will restore my

V. 20. Touched the hem of his garment-There are proud people who come like Naaman with a patronizing air and a lofty demand that some great thing should be done or some great display made in response to their request for healing. Many of them go away angry, and are not as wise as Naaman to repent and obey and be healed. There is another class, timid and fearful and retiring, like this nameless woman who crept near to Christ not so much to steal a blessing as to get one unobserved. While the latter are to be commended before the former, neither class can be counted among those who take the true and manly course to obtain a blessing from the Lord. A public confession was virtually forced from the latter when it ought to have come with ease and as the voluntary expression of the soul that was conscious of a

V. 25. Took her by the hand, and the maid arose-When Jesus takes our hand, a new life is given us; though spiritually dead before, we are made alive by the divine touch and stand before him with new power and with fresh life. HINTS FOR PRIMARY CLASSES.

The first miracle-A girl 13 years old was so very ill that every one thought she must die. The father heard that Jesus was in town, and went to ask him to cure her. The servants followed to say, It is too late; she is dead. But the father had great faith in Jesus. He knew he could even raise the dead to life. This was his only daughter, and he loved her so dearly he would do anything to make her live. Jesus went to the ruler's house, and found the people making a great noise, weeping and wailing, because the little girl was dead. People in eastern lands have customs very different from ours. When death occurs, persons are hired to come with little instruments and make a great show of sorrow with loud noises of various kinds. They howl and cry aloud, striking together their bits of brass or wood, or thumping a sort of noisy drum. Already the ruler's house was filled and surrounded by these noisy mourners. Jesus commanded silence, and ordered every one to leave except the parents and his three most favored disciples, Peter, James and John. When quiet was obtained, Jesus took the hand of the dead maiden, and said, "Damsel, I say unto thee arise." Immediately her spirit came back into her body; she rose to her feet and walked, and Jesus told them to give her food.

The second miracle—This was on a woman who had been ill for twelve years. She had tried many physicians, and spent a great deal or money in paying them and in buying med-icines, but grew worse rather than better. However, she had heard of Jesus and the wonderful cures he had performed, and resolved to go to him. She had such great faith in him she thought she might be cured if she could just touch the hem of his garment. The men in that country and other eastern lands wear loose flowing garments simply henimed around the edge. There was a great crowd following Jesus, but that sick woman pressed through and touched his garment, when, behold, she was instantly cured. Only believe; according to your faith we is unto you. She had great faith, and received a great cure. Reinte the story.

The third miracle-After healing the woman in the crowded street, Jesus went home with the ruler and raised his chi'd from death. When he left the ruler's house, two blind men heard he was coming, and they, too, believed he could cure them.

They heard the crowd approaching, and began to call aloud to Jesus, "Thou son of David, have mercy on us. ' The people told them to keep still, for they called aloud, making a great noise, while Jesus did not wem to notice them. Jesus passed along, and the crowd followed, the blind men hastening on after him, still crying for mercy. They were determined to do all they could to receive their sight, for they believed J. sus could give it to them. They had a faith that led to works; a faith that led them to do all in their power to secure the blessing. This is the right kind of faith, and the kind that receives the blessing. -Sunday School World.

Paint is found better than calcimine or whitewash upon the walls of a kitchen, since the steam from the washing or cooking has less effect upon it, and also because it can be more readily cleaned. Before painting, the wall needs to be washed with soapsuds, then covered with a coat of dissolved glue, which must be allowed to dry thoroughly before the paint is applied, the work being done well and quickly with a broad, flat brush.

Screws that are too small for separate treat ment may be cleaned as follows: Take one pound of screws and place them in a small box-a eigar box will do; put a small quantity of oil on them and shake for a minute; then put a piece of cotton waste in the box, and repeat for a minute; finally put a handful of sawdust in the box and shake for another minute or so, and remove the sawdust by sifting it from the screws in a fine sieve. The screws will be found as good as new.

From all accounts of the "silver snake" of Honduras it most resembles quicksilver in its movement. One traveler tells of a specimen four inches long and about the size of fence wire which it was impossible to hold when taken in the hands. The statement is repeated, which is said to be made on good authority, that fowl often eat these snakes and shortly after can have the pleasure of doing so again, as in a few moments one will wiggle through the alimentary canal, and can perform the feat many times without tiring.
