THE JARRING GOES ON. Mr. Powderly's convention should have adjourned last week. It made a fool of itself on Monday when Powderly asked himself to resign, did resign, and then refused to accept his resignation. Mr. Powderly's opponents on the committee didn't fall into the trap thus set for them. They still live to worry him some now. - Rochester Herald.

The Herald puts the case rather queerly, ed as follows, that it is to say : as that part of | but it must be confessed that the effort to rid the executive board of a couple of pests did not succeed. They will hold office another year, and then, officially speaking, the end will come. It is hoped they will not be able to do any mischief that cannot be repaired while they are in power. The two-year system is by them made obnoxious.

Mr. Powderly, and those of his colleagues who are working harmoniously with him, did not expect any other result than that reached by the resignation move. They tested the general assembly as to their personal popularity, and the test was entirely satisfactory.

WHAT'S THE MATTER!

To two recent fires the new chemical engine has been taken, and at both it has been operated in a manner calculated to create grave doubts as to its utility. It has been the first engine at the fires, and if it were as useful as it was thought to be the damage would not have been serious. But the machine, for some reason, has not done good service, and it remains for the fire, water and light committee to prove whether the fault lies with it or with the persons manipulating it. Chemical engines have been found of great value in other places. So quickly do they get in motion that if a fire be caught in its incipiency it is surely extinguished or held in check until the slower appliances can be brought into play. In their general success the underwriters have so much faith that they make the use of them in some cases necessary to the rating of towns and cities; they made the introduction of such an engine a condition to the present classification of this city, and it is | nership with a business whose policy is that inconceivable that they would do this without being satisfied that it would be found a decided advantage. What, then, should be done? The committee should experiment with the engine again and again, with a view to becoming familiar with its mechanism and testing its efficiency. In no other way can satisfaction be nad either as to the success or failure of the engine. One thing is certain, that if there is any more blundering at fires the people of the city will have occasion to feel uneasy. It will be very hard for them to preserve that confidence in the fire department which they ought to have.

He got madder and madder, and finally fired off the following skit:

"Brevoort House, Oct. 16, 1887.

"To the Editor of the Herald: "Excuse me troubling you, but the vile rag called Truth has had the audacity to publish a letter in the issue of September 15th signed by my name which I never saw or heard of till some time after. I do not pay any attention to the scurrilous section of the press or their doings; but forgery is a little thing, and I think, as I happen to be over here, I would perhaps ask you to make some remarks for me in a prominent sheet of the Herald, to the effect that criticisms, however blackguard, are one thing, but that calmly forging one's individual name is another. I do not wish to take legal steps against these people, as it would only be giving them the publicity they wish for. -Yours truly, MARLBOROUGH."

This brings things to a crisis. The pubblisher of Truth sues him for $25,000, more money than he has about his clothes, and threatens to make as big a show of him in America as he made of himself in England.

A NEW ELECTION.

The tendency of political agitation in | Montreal Witness. Great Britain is towards an early dissolution of parliament. That the position of the government is becoming weaker is made quite evident by the defeat of conservative candidates in the bye elections, and the desertion of the party by some of its members. That the government isseeking to strengthen its position and prolong its rule is also made apparent by the desire to shape its policy more in accord with popular opinion.

In England, too, as in Canada, the conservatives are eager to adopt any plank of the opposition which bids fair to secure the people's support, and so we have Lord post.

Churchill following Mr. Gladstone, approving of certain of his suggestions, improving upon them, (if it is possible for a rattle-brain like Churchill to better finish the schemes of the

At all the late meetings, indeed, policy has been debated, and this is taken generally as a sign of the times. The desire is to capture public attention and to float politital schemes that are designed to benefit the masses. The extended franchise and widened influence of the people make it incumbent upon the party leaders to shape their plans on an entirely new basis. The public pulse is being fairly felt, and it will not be surprising if, ere long, the ballot be used as the only effective way of showing which party has the confidence of the elec-

Though side issues are debated, however, the one great question is home rule for Ireland. The people will be practically voting upon it alone, since a thousand other things are dependant upon it. And how is home rule regarded? Very much as it was a year ago, or at the date of the last election, The education of the people upon the details of Mr. Gladstone's scheme, (the only one before the people), is not complete, and at this juncture it is doubtful how the vote upon it would go.

A METHODIST MANIFESTO.

A permanent committee on temperance, appointed by the Methodist church, recently met and issued a circular to the members and adherents of the Methodist church in | dies. Ontario. It is a stirring manifesto. In opening it discusses the Scott act, now in force in twenty-five counties and two cities, and says that no county or city adopting it has yet rejected it although repeated efforts have been made to bring about that result. The people are urged to stand by the officers of the government and assist them in the enforcement of the law. The valuable lessons taught by the adoption of the act are thus capitulated:

"That the abolition of the license system has not been followed by commercial dis-

"That the law has proved a valuable educator of public opinion.

"That wherever the law is even moderatey well enforced the treating customs are largely destroyed. "That the consumption of intoxicants is decreasing in a degree corresponding with the extent to which the act is adopted. "That the reduction of poverty, drunkenness and crime is more and more manifest.

"That ultimate and complete victory over the enemy lies in total prohibition. "And that these advantages and others may have the fullest effect let us work, pray and vote against the repeal of the act wherever an attempt is made in that direc tion. Let the name of no member of the Methodist church be found upon a repeal petition. Utterly refuse to have any partof the anarchists in the use of dynamite, violence and terrorism. Let it be known to all that a vote to repeal the act is a vote against prohibition, and every vote to sustain the act is a vote for prohibition. Then, in the fear of God, let us endeavor to defeat

The committee recommends that resolutions be passed by officials boards on the question and submitted to the congregations that a full expression of opinion may be obtained from the people. Thus is the Methodist charch outspoken on this great subject.
