SOME TALK ABOUT THE LEADING ACTORS AND ACTRESSES

The Thousands Who Visit the Theatres And What They See shere Gould's Flight to Europe More Than a Desire For Health in it-Nemesis is On His Track The Magnificent Pictures of the Metropolitan Art.

NEW YORK, Nov. 11 .- In the rout and turmoil of an election, with its tighting factions, its roaring meetings, its bands and its processions, November swoops down upon us, and, undismayed by the political fight, announces the formal opening of the amuse ment season. An Englishman dropped down from a balloon in New York, might well imagine himself in London if he attended any of our theatres. In every one he would strike faces that he met at the Criterion, the Haymacket, or the Princess. In fact, we have the entire Princess's company, with Henry Irving at their head. Mrs. Langtry's company is made up largely of English and with few exceptions the same may be said of all the leading companies in New York. Not in my memory have the amusement attractions been so numerous and so good. At Niblo's Denman Thompson crowds the house night after night with his great domestic drama of "The Old Homestead." And what a piece it is ! The vast crowds that throng to see it night after night forget they are in a theatre and that Denman Thompson is an actor. They see nothing but the plain old England home, quaint and truthfu', and the heartbroken but brave old farmer tighting against fate, and by sheer New England grit and honesty winning the battle at last. This last triumph of . Mr. Thompson's has forever shelved the old time stage Yankee, with striped pants just reaching the tops of his boots with straps to keep them down, his long tailed coat, his bell crowned hat, and the pine stick thathe eternally whittled. This was the Yankee with which Hill and Silsby amused our English cousins over a generation ago. In the Old Homestead thate are living men and women such as you might meet every day in any village in New. England. The sweet old songs and the plain homely dialogue follow you to your home with a delightful sense of having seen something that you would be glad to see again. Notwithstanding its tremendous run last season it seems again to have captured the town. It is clean and sweet, just such a piece as the father and mother could enjoy when surrounded by their children. As it looks now it will run to the end of the season if the theatre can be secured.

But while Denman Thompson delights one class of theatre-goers another class is mad on Lily Langtry and Mrs. James Brown Potter. The Lily Langtry of to-day is not the Lily Langtry of three years ago. Then she could not act; now she can. Mrs. James Brown Potter begins where Mrs. Langtry did, and in time may succeed professionally as well, besides enjoying a degree of social consideration which has never been accorded to the Jersey Lily. This, however, does not appear to trouble Mrs. Langtry. She does not seem to care about social consideration any more. She wants money and she is making it very fast, and as fast as she makes it she invests it where it will pay good interest. While an acknowledged beauty she is a practical business woman, capable of managing her own affairs and of looking out for number one.

Potter was tremendous. Everybody was caped. there. Days in advance of her first performance not a ticket could be had for love or money. The boxes had been secured at the start by the speculators as well as the whole lower part of the house, and they reaped a rich reward in the fabulous prices realized, one box which was sold at first for fifty dollars, bringing on the second sale four hundred dollars. It is said that the good bishor, her husband's uncle, looks on her theatrical success as a misfortune and disgrace. Certain it is, that none of the bishop's family have called on her, but in the language of Macbeth she says: "They have tied me to the stake, and I must e'en fight the course." As compared with dozens of professional celebrities Mrs. Potter cannot act. There is a vast difference between reciting Ostler Joe and acting a society drama. She may grow into it in time, practice and the ambition to succeed may do much for her, but whether she succeeds or fails Mr. Minor will have to Corn-steady; No. 2 western 53.

Jim the Penman still crowds the Madison Square, and George S. Knight fills the 14th Street with Baron Rudolph, which is his latest success. Herr Junkleman has taken our German fellow citizens by storm, and the walls of the Old Bowery fairly shake with the roars of laughter that burst from the crowds which throng the theatre night-

Once more we have the German opera at the Metropolitan opera house with Herr Seidel as I predicted at the baton. I knew when Herr Seidel left us, that, once having had a taste of our American book beer and Yankee frankfurters, not to mention weiner, schnetzel and double distilled saur kraut, that Bismark and Von Moltke could never hold him in Berlin. He had not been back there a week when he began to sigh for the flesh pots of Egypt. So here he is, and we are all very glad to have him back. riches! That we have desperate men here is evidenced by the outrages of the last three weeks. A gentlemen's carriage, stopped by highwaymen on one of our most public streets, who only escaped robbery and murder by making a desperate fight. At eleven o'clock in the morning a carriage in Union Square, guarded by a coachman and footman, was robbed of a camel's hair shawl worth a thousand dollars. In Brooklyn, a rich merchant named Wechsler, the proprietor of one of the most magnificent stores in the country, was sent an infernal machine for the purpose of killing him; instead of which it nearly killed his wife, her father and his child. The appalling deviltry of such a crime has filled the city with horror, and if the people could have laid their hands on the miscreant they would have given him a short shrift.

The election has of course absorbed the principal attention of the week. The contest has been one of the most bitter and acrimonious that we have had for many years. All parties have exerted themselves to the utmost, and now that the battle is over, let us hope that they will all once more settle down to business, pick their flints and prepare for the great battle of

The magnificent collection of pictures at the Metropolitan art museum is now the great centre of attraction, and marks an epoch in art which will long be remembered with gratitude. On the splendid roll of contributors whose names should be emblazoned in letters of gold are : Catherine N. Wolfe, Vanderbilt, William Schaus, Judge Hilton, George I. Seney and many others, whose contributions have made the collection the most magnificent public gallery in the United States. Since the opening on Monday over, sixty thousand people have visited the museum, which is not only a delightful place to go to but is one of the most powerful educators of the land. When the building now projected is completed, and the collection is enriched by future muniticent gifits, while it may take us some time to rival the glory of the British museum, we will, nevertheless, have a temple, to whose shrine millions of pilgrims will come to worship the true and the beautiful in art. - Truly Yours, BROADBRIM.

AN INDIAN'S ESCAPE.

He Beats a Grain Dealer-Is Arrested and Escapes from a Lock-Up.

Deseronto, Nov. 11. - Joseph Brant, aged 23, of the Indian reserve, on the 2nd inst., brought in 6 bushels 23 lbs. of barley to R. H. Baker's warehouse, giving his name as Jacob Brant. T. Naylor gave an order for payment at the office of John Mc-Cullough. This order Brant changed by prefixing the figure 8 to the quantity sold, making it read 84 bush. 12 lbs. Mr. Mc-Cullough cashed them, paying him $96.00. Brant said the amount represented two loads. On Saturday Mr. Baker checking the transactions found a large discrepancy. Mr. Jack soon detected the fraud; in the meantime Brant buying goods with great prodigality until the money was practically all gone. He was arrested and placed in the lock-up. Here he remained faring sumptuously until Tuesday. About half way up the side of the door was an iron bolt, passed through the iron plate and the brick wall of his cell, being held in place by a nut on the outside. Brant unscrewed the nut, drew out the bolt, which was about fifteen inches in length, and using it as a lever forced the lock, thus getting out of the cell into the passage. One powerful kick broke open the other door and he then proceeded The rush of the first night to see Mrs. | to the town hall, lifted a window, and es-

Expressive and impressive in the extreme, the beautiful modulation of her tones could hardly be surpassed.
