TWO WEEKS' HARDSHIP.

WHAT THE CREW OF THE SCHR. BESSIE BARWICK ENDURED.

Captain Murray relates the story of the Schooner's Last Trip—A Leaky Craft That Ran on a Desert Shore—Privations in Going Down the Coast with the Thermometer Below Zero.

Capt. Murray and crew of the schr. Bessie Barwick, grain laden from Fort William to Kingston, have reached their home. The chief officer has given the following particulars of the vessel's adventures after leaving the disabled prop. Celtic near Simpson's Island in Lake Ontario on Oct. 27th: "On the night of the 27th it began to blow very hard from the southeast. About 6 o'clock next morning the wind died out and the schooner rolled on a heavy sea. I then discovered that she had sprung a leak and immediately set the two pumps to work, but the water seemed to be gaining on us. On the 28th a good wind sprung up and I headed the Barwick for the north shore. We were then twenty miles from land. About 1 o'clock that day I sighted the Celtic and hoisted the colors and signalled them. I thought they would follow me up, but they did not seem to understand the signal. I do not think Capt. Cavers acted unfairly. Shortly after hoisting the colors the wind commenced to blow hard and it started to snow. It was impossible to see any distance through the snow. The water continued to gain on us, although both pumps were working, and the schooner was a foot lower than when we started. When we were within three miles of the shore I saw that the schooner was getting loggy, and she would not answer her helm. It was getting dark, and our only chance was to reach the shore, and when we were within 150 yards of it the schooner touched the bottom. It was at that time about 6 o'clock. I instructed the crew to load the small boat with provisions and blankets and other things we were likely to need. We went on shore and pitched a tent to shelter us for the night. The temperature was below zero and it was snowing. So we made a large fire to keep us from freezing. The next morning I discovered that we were a short distance west of Pilot harbour, which is due north of Michipicoten Island. The shore here was uninhabited, not a single white man or even an Indian being visible. We went out to the boat to inspect the Barwick and found her in bad shape. The deck was raised up by the swelling of the grain. We remained at Pilot harbour until the 30th, when we started out in the small boat. The lake was so rough that we had to hug the shore. After we had gone about fifteen miles it commenced to get dark, so we hauled the boat up on shore pitched the tent again and remained at that point until the 31st. There was a foot of snow on the ground and the weather was very cold. We made another start, but the lake was so rough that we had to go on shore ten miles east of there. On the morning of Nov. 2nd I concluded to try it again, and as the sea had gone down considerably we made good headway and arrived at Dog river about noon, where we remained with some fishermen. We went to Michipicoten river on the 3rd in a fishing boat and tried to make the railroad, but we were unsuccessful. I could not get even an Indian to take a telegram to the nearest station. We went back to Dog river and enjoyed the hospitality of the fishermen for a week. On the 11th we left for the Saunt in a fishing tug that came for the fishermen, and arrived there about noon on the 12th. Not one crew in a hundred would have worked as they did. They stuck to me like men and never grumbled, though before we went ashore all hands were at the pumps, going without meals and running one at a time to get a cup of coffee. The cook, Nellie Laylock, a Kingston girl, stood the hardships as well as the men."

How the Divine Put it.

Rev. Dr. Rainford, of New York, on one occasion said at the close of the service after the usual formula, "Let us pray for the whole state of Christ's Church militant: "When I say militant that doesn't mean only the Episcopal Church; remember we are praying now for Presbyterians and Catholics and every human being who calls on Christ's name." Two or three were a good deal shocked by his unconventionality, but the major part of his congregation liked him all the better for the reminder.
