R. M HORSEY & CO:

Mr. E. H. McCrea, of the Hudson Bay Co, West Lynne, Manitoba, says: I suffered from Catarrh for a number of years, and expended upwards of $200 employing physicians and catarrh specialists, buying different remedies, inhalants, douches, etc., without obtaining relief. Your advertisement in Toronto Mail induced me to invest fifty cents in Nasal Balm. I sent for a package, and must say it was the best investment I ever made. It gave me immediate relief, and in less than two weeks the droppings from the nasal passages into my throat entirely ceased. I would urgently advise all afflicted with catarrh to use Nasal Bulm.

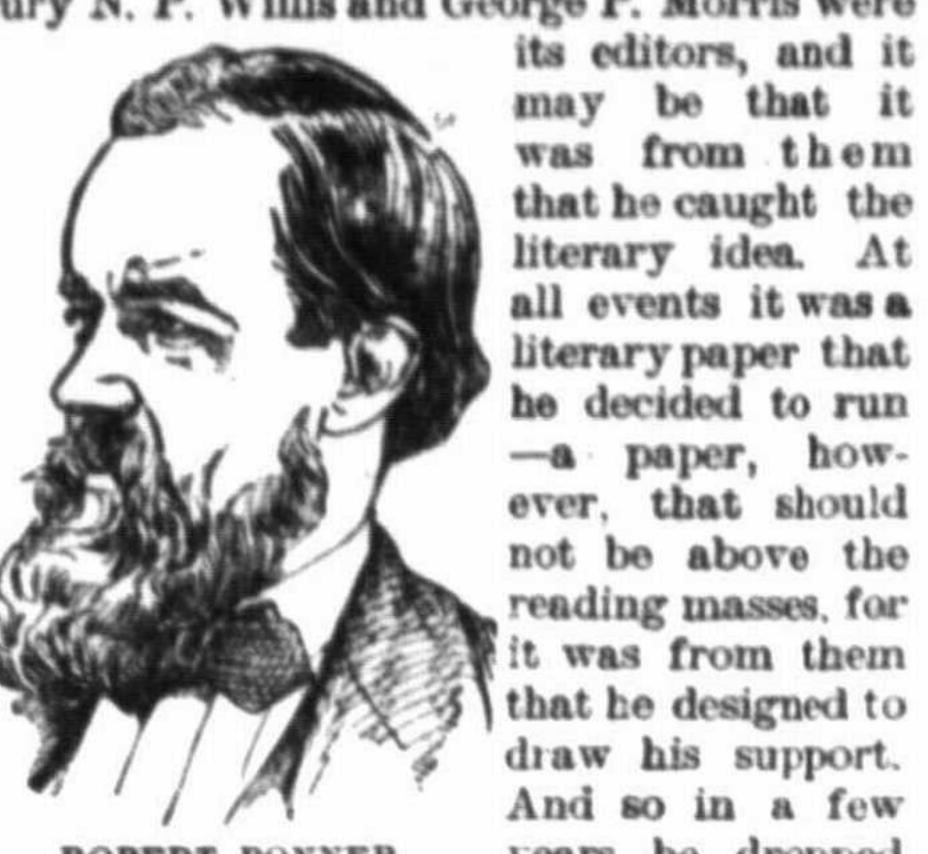

ROBERT BONNER.

NEW YORK LEDGER.

His Retirement from Active Life-How He Began His Career as a Printer, Bought a Commercial Paper, Changed It to a Story Paper and Became Wealthy.

Robert Bonner is no longer editor of The New York Ledger. He has made plenty of. money, has wearied of the grind of the editor's life and now purposes to pay attention to his horses, his real estate and certain. other little matters in which he is interested. Among other things he says he intends to find out about is the art of being a man of leisure. But he has three sons who will now conduct the paper and he will advise them whenever they want his judgment. And he will retain desk room at The Ledger office. He may not find out much about being a man of leisure under the present arrangement, but he thinks he will, and he is entitled to it if any one is.

Robert Bonner is in his 64th year. 'He is a North of Ireland man, and was born near Londonderry. He came to America at al. early age and learned the printer's trade; worked first on The Hartford Courant, then on The New York Evening Mercury and then took up The Merchants' Ledger on his own hook. As the name of the paper indicated, at the time Mr. Bonner took it it was a commercial publication in the main and it had a weekly circulation of 7,000 or 8,000. But Mr. Bonner had something more entertaining than market quotations in his mind for his paper. When he was a printer on The Mercury N. P. Willis and George P. Morris were that he designed to draw his support. And so in a few years he dropped the word "Merchants" from the title of his paper, and The New York Ledger it became, and such it has remained. And The Ledger as Mr. Bonner made it, and has maintained it, is unique among newspapers. Strictly speaking, it is not a newspaper at all, for it contains no news. It has no political opinions. It contains no advertisements. Mr. Bonner has always advertised most extensively in all sorts of newspapers, but no man can buy a line of space in The Ledger. It is published for the purpose of furnishing clean, wholesome amusement, combined with instruction, and not as an advertising medium nor as a political organ. It has been noted by the critical that The Ledger's literature has not always been of the highest standard. This is true, but The Ledger has numbered among its contributors some of the foremost writers of English of these times. Charles Dickens wrote but one story for any American publication, and that was "Hunted Down," which ran through three numbers of The Ledger. Fanny Fern, Henry Ward Beecher, James Parton (Fanny Fern's husband), Edward Everett, William Cullen Bryant, the elder Bennett, Horace Greeley, Dr. Tyng, Dr. John Hall, Tennyson and many other eminent men and women were, and some of them still are, among The Ledger's contributors. Sylvanus Cobb, Jr., and Mrs. E. D. E. N. Southworth, the two most popular writers of their class in the world, were early taken up by Mr. Bonner, who saw the elements of popularity in their work and never regretted the large prices he paid for it. Mr. Cobb's "Gunmaker of Moscow" has been published several times in The Ledger, and Mrs. Southworth's "Capitola, or the Hidden Hand," has enjoyed a like run of popular favor. A peculiarity of The Ledger stories has always been that they were never published in book form, and that they could never be obtained save in the columns of Mr. Bonner's paper.

Newspaper writers and literary people generally always have more or less trouble in getting pay for their work promptly, the general rule with publishers being (with some notable exceptions among them, Mr. Bonner) to defer payment until publication. A well known contributor to the press related his experience with Mr. Bonner to the writer of this article the other day.

"Mr. Bonner is the best pay in the business," he said. "You leave some manuscript with him and go back in a week. Maybe you have left soveral articles. When you are announced Mr. Bonner appears at a little window. 'Ten dollars for your poem on ---,' he says. 'That one,' handing another one back, 'I can't use.' Then he hands you the $10 in crisp treasury notes. He never told me why matter rejected was not available but once. Then he said:

"'Now, Henry, you think the poem I didn't take is much better than the one 1 did take. So do I. That is, for me to read. But, you see, you don't understand my people. And they wouldn't understand your poem. Why? Well, there are four words in the third line of the second verse that would be Greek to the average farmer's boy. I want matter that every reader of The Ledger can comprehend, and so long as I receive plenty of such matter every week I can't afford to take any other."

In this policy lies the secret of The Ledger's

Mr. Bonner is known the world over as a lover of fine horses. In early life he cared nothing for them. But when his doctor told him he must allow himself some relaxation or lose his health he decided to try driving, and bought a good, three minute road horse. Col. Harper, head of the house of Harper & Brothers, gave Mr. Bonner his dust. Then Bonner determined to take the dust of no one and bought fast horses, among them being Dexter, for so many years king of the world's trotters. Among his horses are Rarus, record 2:13 1-4; trial, 2:11 1-2; Edwin Forrest, 2:18; trial, 2:11 3-4; Pickard, 2:18 1-4; Russella, a sister of Maud S.; Nutbourne, out of the same dam; Day Break, out of the dam of Jay-Eye-See, and, greatest of all, Maud S., the possessor of the 2:08 3-4 record. She got that, however, after Mr. Bonner had bought her of William H. Vanderbilt on Aug. 19, 1884, and after, on Nov. 11, in the same year, she made the mile at Lexington in 2:09 1-4. Her great record was made at Cleveland, July 20, 1885. Mr. Bonner's last catalogue is a list of sixty-one fine horses, and it shows that he has lost none of his interest in the joys of the road and of his stables in New York and on his farm near Tarrytown.

Mr. Bonner is a quiet, unassuming man, but has numbered among his friends most of the eminent men of America who have lived during his time. He is still hale and hearty.

Just Pailed.

From 1862 till 1873 no firm name stood better on Nassau street or cast a fairer reflection into Wall street than that of Fisk & tionately styled the "good Mr. Hatch," as he was identified with the noted Cremorne mission, and was an active supporter of church and mission work in general. Indeed, he occasionally preached at the Cremorne. The firm appeared to be on the top wave of prosperity till the memorable September days of 1873; then the great erash carried Fisk & Hatch with it. But

and allwas going o p swimmingly when in May, 1884, the noted Grant & Ward bubble burst. Failures followed thick and fast. Fisk & Hatch found themselves

loaded with unavailable securities, and once more went to the wall. This time the ruin seemed complete, as ugly charges were filed against the firm. But that was a time when every one was suspected, and though the firm was broken up the individual members escaped further annoyance. Mr. Fisk afterward organized the house of Harvey Fisk & Sons, which is still in business, and the old house became A. S. Hatch & Co. But its strength and glory were gone, and so when it was announced on the Stock Exchange a few days ago that A. S. Hatch had failed there was no excitement. It was the third time and final. The old banker and broker probably drops out of Wall street for good; and like so many before him, the man once so prominent among the wealthy, once president of the Stock Exchange, will live out his days in retirement and soon be forgotten among the devotees of Mammon.

It is rather pleasant now to contemplate Mr. Hatch in the character of a preacher. Such he was for many years—a lay preacher, as it were. Old visitors to Jerry McAuley's Cremorne mission, on Thirty-second street, New York, tell of his appearance there, dressed in simple elegance, and of his practical sermons to the queer converts of that region. There is not in the world a more thoroughly democratic place than that mission. Men and women, black and white, the "toughest" habitue of the slums and the richly dressed visitor sit side by side on the benches, listen to music produced by lady missionaries and sermons delivered by a Wall street prince or a Baxter street "tough." Mr. Hatch was always heard with deep interest, as his sermons were intensely practical. After him some of the "boys" usually gave their experience, and very seldom was one of them dull. Their short addresses were racy and full of blunt humor. Many a poor fellow who takes in the Cremorne meetings will be sorry for the misfortune of Mr. Hatch.

It is patronized almost exclusively by Scandinavians who have settled in the northwest and its rolls show a goodly array of students of both sexes, as it is run on the coeducational plan. Its faculty is ample and its professors are young men of energy. The college is distinctly religious and Lutheran, and many of its students are fitting themselves for the Gospel ministry. Both the English and the Scandinavian languages are used. At the recent dedication of certain new buildings of this institution Governor McGill and other Minnesota dignitaries were present and took part in the ceremonies.

Dr. Morell Mackenzie.

There is much indignation in Germany over Dr. Morell Mackenzie, who, through the influence of Queen Victoria, has hitherto had exclusive charge of the crown prince, now slowly dying with cancer of the throat. The German press unites in saying that the English physician's diagnosis of the disease was wrong from the start, and that had some of the renowned specialists Germany possesses been intrusted with the case a cure might have been effected, while this is out of the question now. Dr. Morell Mackenzie was born in DR. MORELL MACKENZIE. the year 1837, at Leytonston, county of Essex, England. He studied in London, and passed a successful examination when he was 22 years old, whereupon he practiced at the London hospital, attaining the degree of M. A. in 1862. He now devoted himself particularly to the study of diseases of the larynx, and this with such success that in 1863 a treatise on the larynx by him received the Jackson prize of the Royal Surgical society. In order to complete his special studies he went to Paris, then to Vienna, and finally to Buda-Pesth, where, under the direction of the famous Czermach, he became a thorough expert with the laryngoscope. Before he had left London he had founded the first clinic for diseases of the throat. On his return to London he also lectured at the London Medical college on laryngology, and wrote various scientific works and essays in medical papers, which soon gained him a famous name and a most remunerative practice.

Manufacturers of fire brick say that the only reliable way to distinguish good clay is by tasting. If it tastes salty, it is genuine fire clay; if flat and dull, it is worthless for fire brick.
