NASAL BALM

Mr. E. H. McCrea, of the Hudson Bay Co., West Lynne, Manitoba, says: I suffered from Catarrh for a number of years, and expended upwards of $200 employing physicians and catarrh specialists, buying different remedies, inhalants, douches, etc., without obtaining relief. Your advertisement in Toronto Mail induced me to invest fifty cents in Nasal Balm. I sent for a package, and must say it was the best investment I ever made. It gave me immediate relief, and in less than two weeks the droppings from the nasal passages into my throat entirely ceased. I would urgently advise all afflicted with catarrh to use Nasal Balm.

Directions for Taking India Ink Impressions of Ferns—Information About American Indians in General, and the Ute Tribe in Particular.

The name of Indians was first given to the red men of America from the mistaken notion of the early voyagers—Columbus himself included—that the newly found continent was in reality a part of India. This was soon shown to be an error, but the name of Indians thus wrongfully applied to the inhabitants continued to be used in every narrative of voyage and discovery, and has descended to our own times, only that we now qualify it to some extent by speaking of the red men as American Indians.

UTE SQUAW AND PAPOOSE.

There are many tribes among the American Indians, but year by year their numbers are decreasing. The home of the civilized and partially civilized remnants of the once powerful and warlike Indian tribes is known as the Indian territory, and contains what are called reservations, on which the various tribes dwell. Agents representing the United States live among these tribes with a view to their further advancement and protection. Many of the tribes have settled down in comparative contentment and follow agricultural pursuits for a livelihood and have become quite civilized. Others, from their naturally fierce and warlike dispositions, continue to give more or less trouble to the government. Among the latter may be named the Utes in Colorado and the Apaches in New Mexico. Our cut represents a Ute squaw and her papoose, or baby. The Utes are a tribe of the Shoshones or Snakes, are migratory in their habits and great hunters. They enjoy wandering about the country and are to be found in New Mexico, Nevada, Utah and Colorado. When a Ute squaw takes up her line of march she straps the little papoose to her back. In the cut she is holding the infant in her arms, so that our young people may have a picture of the faces of both mother and child.

India Ink Impressions of Ferns.

Procure some smooth cartridge paper, then take the ferns or leaves and arrange them in position. If ferns, they look well put in groups; if ivy, it will look well as a border; but whichever it is, put a pin through a leaf here and there to keep the fronds from moving—very fine pins, or the holes will show. Then procure a small tooth comb, a stick of India ink, and a toothbrush. Dissolve the ink in water—don't get it in lumps—and dip your brush in the ink. Do not get too much on, and rub in gently along the comb, holding it over the group of ferns. If you get too much ink on your brush, it will fall in big drops; the object is to make them as fine as possible. Rub more or near the joints of the ferns, just as in a photograph, and let the color gradually die away to the edge.

Take the ferns off, and, says Golden Days, you will be surprised at the effect you have produced. If neatly done, the ferns will bear a strong resemblance to a large sized photograph.

The Elephant as a Nurse.

In India, where the elephant is treated by his owner almost as one of the family, the grateful animal makes a return for the kindness shown it by voluntarily taking care of the baby. It will patiently, says St. Nicholas, permit itself to be mauled by its little charge, and will show great solicitude when the child cries. Sometimes the elephant will become so attached to its baby friend as to insist upon its constant presence. Such a case is known where the elephant went so far as to refuse to eat except in the presence of its little friend. Its attachment was so genuine that the child's parents would not hesitate to leave the baby in the elephant's care, knowing that it could have no more faithful nurse. And the kindly monster never belied the trust reposed in it. If the flies came about the baby, it would drive them away. If the child cried the giant nurse would rock the cradle until the little one slept.

A Tame Gray Squirrel.

A young gray squirrel found by a party of children at Ivoryton, Conn., was cared for until it had grown large enough to help itself, when it was set at liberty. The children had no idea it would ever come back, but the same night the squirrel came to the window and tapped upon the pane. It was admitted, and the next morning whisked away again. It has built two nests, using whichever it chooses in the night time, except when it rains. Then it always asks for admission to the house.

Thanksgiving Day.

Save for a dog he is alone, A friend he can but give a bone.

Oh! happy children, here behold One who is poor and weak and old, With not the smallest scrap of meat, Or aught but crusts of bread to eat, Thanksgiving Day, When thousands lay A feast in bountiful array.

Oh! children, happy children, blessed With all things that the world holds best, Look on the picture of these two And try some kindly act to do, Thanksgiving Day, To light the way Of some one poor and lone as they.

THE BRECKINRIDGE STATUE.

Lately Unveiled with Proper Ceremonies at Lexington, Ky.

The recent unveiling of a monument to John C. Breckinridge, at Lexington, Ky., is the culmination of a series of events which could have occurred in no other land than the United States. Here was a man who had served his country on foreign fields, entered the state legislature and national congress as soon as his age allowed, been elected to the second highest office in the nation at the early age of 35, and filled the three functions of vice president, senator elect from Kentucky and candidate for president one year, only to be a fugitive and in arms against that country the next year; four years later an exile, and at the last an honored citizen of his native state and once more assured of national honors if death had not intervened. Yet this man died at the early age of 54! His life is the epitome of the amazing revolution through which his nation passed in the last quarter of its first century.

The ceremonies of unveiling the Breckinridge statue occurred in the presence of an immense throng, including the governor and senators from Kentucky and many veterans of the civil war and Mexican war. The principal address was delivered by Senator J. C. S. Blackburn. The statue is the work of Valentine, the Virginia sculptor, and is of heroic size, eight feet high, representing Breckinridge in the attitude of an orator. He was almost a perfect model of manhood, and the statue presents his handsome form and striking, intellectual features with all their life and animation. A pleasing feature of the ceremonies was that veterans of both the Union and Confederate armies and civilians of like varying views took part equally. It was to honor a great Kentuckian they were there; not to perpetuate old time hatreds.

John Cabell Breckinridge was born near Lexington, Jan. 21, 1821; graduated at Center college, Danville; entered on the practice of law at an early age, and soon quit it to go to Mexico as major of the Third Kentucky regiment. He was elected to the legislature in 1849, and in 1851 to congress from the Lexington district. He advanced so rapidly in congress that in 1856, when but just of the legal age, he was elected vice president on the ticket with James Buchanan, his youth and chivalrous bearing adding much strength in the west to the ticket. In 1860 he was the candidate of the southern wing of the Democrats for president, just after being chosen to the United States senate. From the chair of vice president and president of the national senate he took his seat as a member of that body and held it till midsummer of the memorable year of 1861. In October of that year he issued his noted "Lexington address" to the people of Kentucky, announcing his adherence to the cause of the southern Confederacy, to which he thereafter devoted his sword and talents. He distinguished himself on many battle fields, and at the close of the war went to Cuba and thence to Canada; but as soon as complete amnesty was declared he returned to Lexington and engaged in railroad construction. He was vice president of the Lexington and Big Sandy railroad at the time of his death, May 17, 1875. So rapid had been the course of reconstruction, and so complete the social and political amnesty in his state, that he was a prominent candidate, and had he lived would undoubtedly have soon represented his state once more in the national senate.

A French Crematory.

Cremation has gained so rapidly in French public opinion that the municipal authorities of Paris have provided for the erection of a large and strikingly handsome crematory in the noted cemetery of Pere la Chaise. Though begun a year ago, but one wing of the structure is yet completed. This is now ready for use, but another section will be added, with a long hall in which the friends of the dead may await the cremation or hold the religious ceremonies of their faith. The really striking fact about the structure is that they should have made it so beautiful. Even the chimneys of white stone which rise above it are fashioned like lofty towers, and the general symmetry and attractiveness make it seem as if French taste could rob even death of its terrors. In general external appearance it is like a mosque, rising three stories high, with dome to the rear and projections in stone. The form when completed will be that of a rectangle, with tall and narrow doors and windows, and the general effect will be fine. Thorough experiments with the cremation furnace already in place have been made in the presence of M. Chassaing, vice president of the municipal council, police captains and others; and it is confidently announced that the system will work perfectly. The plan, however, is different from that of those American crematories in which superheated air is the sole decomposing agent; in the Pere la Chaise furnace the hot flame envelops the body, the currents of air being so strong and the flame so condensed on the corpse that rapid carbonization results. There is nothing offensive. The front of the furnace is handsomely finished; bright tiles surround the mouth and ornamental bronze doors close it. These slide back easily and close, to leave no aperture whatever. But in the rear is a small chamber for the sexton (if we may call him such) only, and he can turn back the outer door at any time and through a small hole witness the progress of decomposition.
