WHOLESOME RECREATION

We want more fresh air, more sunlight, more of the abandon of field sports. I cry out for it in behalf of the church of God as well as in behalf of secular interests. I wish that this winter our ponds and our rivers, and our Capitoline grounds might be all awake with the heel and the shout of the swift skater. I wish that when the warlike weather comes the graceful car might dip the stream and the evening tide be resonant with boatman's song, the bright prow splitting the crystalline billow. We shall have the smooth and grassy lawn, and we will call out people of all occupations and professions, and ask them to join in the ball player's sport. You will come back from these outdoor exercises and recreations with strength in your arm, and color in your cheek, and a flash in your eye, and courage in your heart. In this great battle that is opening against the kingdom of darkness we want not only a consecrated sound, but a strong arm and stout lungs and a mighty muscle. I bless God that there are so many recreations that have not on them any taint of iniquity; recreations in which we may engage for the strengthening of the body, for the clearing of the intellect, for the illumination of the soul.

There is still another form of recreation which I commend to you, and that is the pleasure of doing good. I have seen young men weak and cross and sour and repelling in their disposition, who, by one heavenly touch, have awakened up and become blessed and buoyant, the ground under their feet and the sky over their heads breaking forth into music. "Oh," says some youth: "man in the house today, I should like that recreation above all others, but I have not the means." My dear brother, let us take an account of storking this morning. You have a large estate, if you only realize it. Two hands. Two feet. You will have, perhaps, during the next year, at least $10 for charitable contribution. You will have twenty-five hundred cheerful looks, if you want to employ them. You will have five thousand pleasant words, if you want to speak them. Now, what an amount that is to start with.

You go out to-morrow morning and you see a case of real destitution by the wayside. You give him two cents. The blind man hears the pennies rattle in his hat, and he says, "Thank you, sir; God bless you." You pass down the street, trying to look indifferent; but you feel from the very depth of your soul a profound satisfaction that you made that man happy. You go on still farther, and find a poor boy with a wheelbarrow, trying to get it up on the curbstone. He fails in the attempt. You say, "Stand back, my lad; let me try." You push it up on the curbstone for him, and pass on. He wonders who that well-dressed man was that helped him. You did a kindness to the boy, but you did a great joy to your own soul. You will not get over it all the week.

On the street to-morrow morning you will see a sick man passing along. "Ah," you say, "what can I do to make this man happy? He certainly does not want money; he is not poor; but he is sick." Give him one of those twenty-five hundred cheerful looks that you have garnered up for the whole year. Look joy and hopefulness into his soul. It will thrill him through, and there will be a reaction upon your own soul. Going a little farther on you will come to the store of a friend who is embarrassed in business matters. You will go in and say, "What a fine store you have! I think business will brighten up, and you will have more custom after awhile. I think there is coming a great prosperity to all the country. Good morning." You pass out. You have helped that young man, and you have helped yourself. And that night you go home; you sit by the fire, you talk a little, you sing a little, you laugh a little; you say: "I really don't know what is the matter with me. I never felt so splendidly in my life." I will tell what is the matter with you. You spent only two cents out of the $10; you have contributed one out of twenty-five hundred cheerful looks; you have given ten, fifteen or twenty of the five thousand pleasant words you are going to speak during the year; you have with your own hands helped the boy with the wheelbarrow, and you feel in body, mind and soul the thrill of that recreation. Which do you think was the happier—Col. Gardiner, who sat with his elbow on a table spread with all extravagant viands, looking off at a dog on the rug, saying: "How I would like to change places with him; I be the dog and he be Col. Gardiner;" or those two Moravian missionaries who wanted to go into the lazaretto for the sake of attending the sick, and they were told: "If you go in there, you will never come out. We never allow any one to come out, for he would bring the contagion." Then they made their wills and went in, first to help the sick and then to die. Which was the happier, Col. Gardiner or the Moravian missionaries dying for others? Was it all sacrifice when the missionaries wanted to bring the Gospel to the negroes at the Barbadoes, and, being denied the privilege, sold themselves into slavery, standing side by side and lying side by side down in the very ditch of suffering, in order that they might bring those men up to life and God and heaven? Oh, there is a thrill in the joy of doing good. It is the most magnificent recreation to which a man ever puts his hand or his head or his heart.

But, before closing, I want to impress upon you that mere secular entertainments are not a fit foundation for your soul to build on.
 I was reading of a woman who had gone all the rounds of sinful amusement, and she came to die. She said, "I will die to-night at 6 o'clock." "Oh," they said, "I guess not, you don't seem to be sick." "I shall die at 6 o'clock, and my soul will be lost. I know it will be lost. I have sinned away my day of grace." The noon came. They desired to seek religious counsel.
 "Oh," she said, "it is of no use. My day is gone. I have been all the rounds of worldly pleasure, and it is too late. I shall die to-night at 6 o'clock." The day wore away, and it came to 4 o'clock, and to 5 o'clock, and she cried out at 5 o'clock, "Destroyed spirits, ye shall not have me yet; it is not 6, it is not 6!" The moments went by, and the shadows began to gather, and the clock struck 6; and while it was striking her soul went. What hour God will call for us I do not know—whether 6 o'clock to-night, or 3 o'clock this afternoon, or at 1 o'clock, or at this moment. Sitting where you are, falling forward, or standing where you are, dropping down, where would you go to?
 But our hour for adjourning has already come, and the last hour of our life will soon be here, and from that hour we will review this day's proceedings. It will be a solemn hour. If from our death pillow we have to look back and see a life spent in sinful amusement, there will be a dart that will strike through our soul sharper than the dagger with which Virginius slew his child. The memory of the past will make us quake like Macbeth. The iniquities and rioting through which we have passed will come upon us, weird and skeleton as Meg Merrilies. Death, the old Shylock, will demand and take the remaining pound of flesh and the remaining drop of blood, and upon our last opportunity for repentance, and our last chance for heaven, the curtain will forever drop.

ALGERNON S. SULLIVAN.

The Late Public Administrator in New York City—His Life and Death.
 When the telegraph lately announced the death of Algernon S. Sullivan, the public thought of him only as the eminent orator and lawyer of New York city. Very few knew that he was almost equally prominent in Indiana forty years ago, in a most exciting epoch of that state's history, before he had reached his majority, and that he was then affectionately known as the "Boy Orator," the "Young Hercules of Democracy," and similar titles of the kind current in the somewhat effusive West. Though Mr. Sullivan ranked high as a lawyer and orator he never attained to anything like the national fame which his early friends in the Ohio valley confidently predicted for him. Perhaps the reasons may be found in the remarkable political changes: When he "stumped" Indiana in 1846-7, the Democratic party was in the full tide of its aggressive energy, and he was advocating the most progressive measures Indiana ever adopted; when he settled in the city in the full maturity of his powers the Democratic party was entering on its long period of exclusion from office as an "opposition party." Through all the years of greatest political excitement he was unflinching in his political faith; but opposition was not in the line of his abilities.

Algernon S. Sullivan was born in Madison, Ind., in 1827. His father was an eminent lawyer, once a justice of the state supreme court, and emigrated from Virginia early in the century. He is charged with having selected the name of Indiana's capital, but it is not generally remembered against him. The son graduated at Miami university, Oxford, Ohio, studied law in his father's office and for two years took a very active part in Indiana politics, speaking in all parts of the state in favor of the establishment of free common schools and defending the policy of the Polk administration. In 1848 he located in Cincinnati and married a Miss Groesbeck. She lived but a few months and he afterwards married a Miss Hammond, of Virginia, and in 1859 located in New York city. He first came into national prominence as associate counsel with James T. Brady in defending the men captured on the privateer Savannah, who were tried on the charge of piracy. It was a time of most intense excitement and Mr. Sullivan was an outspoken anti-war Democrat. It was charged that he was a plot to assassinate him and that he was in danger even in the court room, but many unfounded rumors gained credence in those dark days. He was public administrator of the city for some years, and was quite active in religious, musical and benevolent work. He was a member of the Presbyterian church, as well as Tammany hall, and president of the Southern society of New York. While in apparently average health, he was taken with a chill at his office; it soon developed into typhoid fever, and in ten days he died at the age of 60.

AN ILLINOIS STATUE.
 Erected to the Memory of Pierre Menard, the State's First Lieutenant Governor.
 The statue erected to the memory of Pierre Menard, the first lieutenant governor of Illinois, at Springfield, has recently been uncovered. It was put up at the expense of Mr. Charles P. Chouteau, a wealthy citizen of St. Louis, between whose father and Menard there existed a life long friendship. The selection of a design and its execution were under the care of the late E. B. Washburne, who associated with him the governor of Illinois and other prominent citizens.

 Pierre Menard was a French Canadian, born at Quebec in 1767. When quite a young man he engaged in the Indian trade business, and it is said that about the year 1787 he met George Washington, who, becoming interested in Menard's familiarity with the ways of the Indians and his facility for dealing with them, induced the young Frenchman to become a citizen of the United States and transfer his mercantile operations to the west.
 Menard was four years at Vincennes, and then went to Kaskaskia. His first employment at the latter place was agent for an Indian trader and for the United States government. Before the territory of Illinois was set off he was sent as a delegate to the territorial legislature of Indiana, which met in Vincennes in 1803. In 1817 he was a member of the first territorial legislature of Illinois, composed of a council and house of representatives, Menard being president of the council. The next year he was elected lieutenant governor. After an active life, during which he amassed a considerable fortune, he died at Kaskaskia, aged 77 years, in 1844.
 The first design for a statue submitted to the committee was that for a plain marble shaft. The committee was not satisfied with this, and the governor, then John M. Hamilton, and Secretary of State Dement favored one to be composed of bronze figures. The other members concurring, the design of the monument now exposed to view was selected. Menard is represented in the act of bartering with the Indians for furs and pelts. The Indian is seated on a bale of pelts holding in his right hand the skin of an animal. In his left, and resting upon the left arm, is the "pipe of peace." The idea intended to be represented by the artist is the peaceful and trusting relations existing between the Indians and Menard in his business of fur trader, in which occupation he spent the greater portion of his life.
 We can't wholly spise de pusson what likes de same things dat we does. We mount hato his ways, but we mire his judgment.—Arkansaw Traveler.
