IN AFTER DAYS.

When other eyes look love to thine, And other lips caress thee; When other arms around thee twine. And other tones address thee; When to thy glance another choice Replies with tender smiling, And in thine ear another voice-Sounds full of love beguiling-Then will no memory with thee plead And whisper low of me?

Will not my image intercedo-Can I e'er die to thee? When to thy cheek another face Lies close in fond caressing, And from thy brow care's every trace Another hand is pressing; When on thy breast another heart

Finds refuge from all sorrow, And, knowing ye need never part, Dreads not a lonely morrow. E'en then will memory with thee plead And whisper low of me; Then shall my image intercede-

I'll ne'er quite die to thee. -"Gazelle" in Courier-Journal.

BIXBY WAS CALM

When One of the Children Was Seized

with the Croup the Other Night. One of the Bixby children was seized with a fit of croup the other night. Bixby heard the little fellow's labored breathing, and bounding clear over the footboard of the bed yelled "Croup!" in about the same voice that the escaped idiot yells "Fire!" at the theatre.

Then he tried to put his trousers on over his head, but finally got them on wrong side out, and tore into his shirt with it wrong side in front,

"Jump!" he screamed to his wife, "there isn't a second to lose! Get the syrup of squills! Put on a tub of hot water! Give him something to drink! Get hot flannels on his chest instantly! Hurry! hurry! Don't lie there doing nothing while the child is choking to death! Fly around!"

Mrs. Bixby is one of those meek but eminently sensible and practical little women who never get a tenth part of the credit for the good they do in this world. While Bixby was racing up and down stairs, declaring that nobody was doing anything but himself, Mrs. Bixby quietly took the little sufferer in

"Do something quick!" screeched Bixby, as he upset a pan of hot water on the bed and turned a saucer of melted lard over on the dressing case. "Here, somebody, quick!" he yelled. "Can't anybody do a thing but me! Run for the doctor, some of you. Give the child some more squills. Is there anything hot at his feet! Give him aconite. He ought to have a spoon of oil. If he don't get relief instantly he'll die, and here there's nobody trying to do a thing but me! Bring him some warm water with a little soda in it. He ought to have been put into a hot both an hour ago. Heat up the bath room! What's on his chest! Great heavens! has the child got to die because no one will do a thing for him?"

Mrs. Bixby quietly and unaided brings the child around all right and sits with him until daylight, after she has quieted Bixby down and got him to bed.

And next morning he has the gall to say at the office: "One of my little chaps nearly died with croup last night, and I had mighty hard work bringing him around all right, but I did, after working like a Trojan all night. It's a terrible disease and scares women nearly to death. They fly all to pieces right off. A person wants their wits about them. You want to keep perfectly cool and not fool away a second in hysterics. That's where a man has the advantage over a woman in managing a case of croup. It's mighty lucky I was at home to take my little chap in hand."-Tid Bits.

Curiosity of City People.

It is astonishing how little it takes to provoke the gathering of a crowd. I thought of this yesterday when I counted a couple of hundred men and women blocking the sidewalk on lower Fulton street as they watched a man hoisting an iron beam into place on the elevated railroad structure. A little further on there were nearly fifty people crowding and craning their necks to see a man draw waxed threads through shoe soles. A couple of automatic figures going through gymnastic exercises were enough to hold the attention of half a hundred persons for several minutes at another store window, and the spectacle of a man pulling a string of molasses candy from a hook excited the curious gaze of a crowd of people who fairly blocked the sidewalk. Hardly one of these people but had long lived in the city, and yet | for over ten years; had it very bad, could they displayed a curiosity that would have | hardly breathe. Some nights I could not excited their derision if they had seen it practiced by their country cousins.-"Rambler" in Brooklyn Eagle.

The Streets of Gibraltar.

The main street of the town through which we walked to the Hotel Royal was narrow and crooked. All sorts of people were passing to and fro-Spaniards, Englishmen, Italians, Greeks, Jews, Moors, sailors and red coated British soldiers intermingled with horses, donkeys and goats. The smaller streets leading off from the principal one are short and narrow, either running down to the seaside fortifications and ramparts or upward toward the hillside, sometimes being merely huge stairs, up and down which the donkeys tread with secure and careful steps. Few of the buildings have any merit in an architectural sense; houses rise in ranges up the steep acclivity, many of them being colored with a blush tint or a dirty yellow, which makes them ugly and unattractive. In short, the picturesque appearance which pleased us so much from the bay quite disappeared when we entered the town.-Boston Transcript.

A Story of Lincoln.

Mr. Lincoln persistently declined to read the harsh comments of the newspaper press and the fierce mouthings of platform orators, and under his advice I as persistently refused to make any public statement concerning that ill judged affair. He believed with Sir Walter Scott, that if a cause of action is good it needs no vindication from the actor's motives; if bad it can derive none. When I suggested to him that the slander ought to be refuted—that a word from him would silence. his defamers-Mr. Lincoln replied with great earnestness: "No, Hill; there has already been too much said about this falsehood. Let the thing alone. If I have not established character enough to give the lie to this charge I can only say that I am mistaken in my own estimate of myself. In politics every man must skin his own skunk. These fellows are welcome to the hide of this one. Its body has already given forth its unsavory odor." -Ward H. Lamon,

The Turkeys of Egypt.

The turkeys of Egypt are said to be superior to those of any country in Europe. Though the original stock was obtained in this country, difference of the climate has served to change many of their characteristics. - Chicago Times.
