GALLOWAY'S GREETING

Peace on earth, good will towards men, Is the theme of our earthly song; Peace on earth, good will towards men, Should mould our actions all day long.

It should lead us think how best to bring The happy smile, the cheerful ring Of laughter to the cheerless hearth, And thus make glad this dreary earth.

The way is plain: see GALLOWAY'S Furs, There neither cats skin, sheep, nor curs, But just the thing to keep your warm ; To keep you free from cold and storm, Which must bring peace in this cold clime. And make your Christmas a happy time.

ON LIARS AND LYING.

ELLA WHEELER SAYS LIARS OFTEN ER BORN THAN MADE.

Some Different Types of Liars-Women With Whom Lying is a Disease-Portraits of People That Many Will Recognize-When Silence is Akin to Lying-Liars More Frequently Born Than Made. (Copyrighted 1887.)

"Let him who is without sin cast the first stone.

We are all liars to a greater or less degree, but that lamentable fact does not lessen the enormity of the crime.

I once saw a charming lady, in the presence of several guests whom she had been delightfully entertaining, take a card from her servant's hand, scan it with a slight frown, and return it, saying, "Tell the gentleman I have gone to bed with a violent headache." The servant bowed and conveyed the message-thus increasing the number of liars by two.

Fashionable lies of this kind are not supposed to count in the catalogue of sins, but it seems to me they are like parasites which destroy the delicate leaves of a plant after a time. They injure and blunt the finer per ceptions of right and wrong.

A gentleman laid a wager with a lady the other evening that she could not live through the following day without lying, unless she hurt the feelings of some of her'friends by seeming rudeness.

She lost the wager, declaring that she found polite lies absolutely necessary, as he had said. I do not believe them necessary, however, and I am confident we would win and retain more friends in the long run if we built our daily lives on a foundation of absolute truthfulness.

The moment I detect man or woman in a lie, however trivial, my interest and respect is lessened, and I am sure other people are influenced in the same way.

The moment my own lips have uttered a polite lie I feel a decided lessening of regard for myself, and am conscious that silence or tact could have saved me from the foolish

The liar who possesses a good memory may make a success of his profession for years without detection. It is seldom, however, that the art of lying and the art of remembering are combined in one person.

I remember a woman in my own profes sion, who told me in our first interview that she had received $75 for a short article which had recently appeared. On our second meeting she spoke of the matter again and said she received $50 for it. A few days later I heard her mention it to a third party as having brought her $25. I learned afterwards that she was paid $15 for the article. Had she recollected her first state ment I might never have doubted her word.

Lying is like the opium habit. I have known people who began to tell "white lies" for convenience, and ended by becoming the most absolute and shameless of liars on every occasion.

In some cases lying is a disease, and should be treated as such. I know two ladies who are otherwise excellent in character, and both are valuable members of society. One is a devout church-member in high standing, and foremost in all good works of charity.

Both these ladies seem physically and morally unable to tell the truth. When the truth would better serve their purposes, they choose a lie. They harm no one but themselves, as their lies are never malicious, and refer usually to their own affairs. One of these ladies is fond of telling the most marvellous stories of herself and her friends, their remarkable adventures, their extensive wealth, their wide travels, their intimate acquaintance with renowned people. If you repeat these fairy stories after her you cover yourself with humiliation, as they are almost entirely fabrications of her brain. If you disprove her statements to her face she looks you in the eyes, and smiles, and emphatically declares you misunderstood her words. Her conversation is sparkling and bright, and you are amused and entertained highly, until you discover her gift for improvising. The other lady's talent runs more in a mercantile channel. She makes a purchase in your presence for which she pays $10. Let a third person enter the room, and she declares smilingly that she has just paid $20 ior the article. If you correct her she in sists that you are mistaken. Her doctor's and dentist's bills, her servants' wages, the price of her bonnets and boots, are all subjects of exaggerated statements. She has, like the majority of liars, a memory like a sieve, and consequently contradicts herself a dozen times in as many hours. Her friends all acknowledge her unfortunate peculiarity, but she is so kind-hearted, and possesses so many other admirable traits, that she is tolerated in spite of her lies. It seems to me both of these ladies need the serious attention of some specialist on diseases of the brain.

I have heard an opinion expressed that women are less frank and honest than men. If this is true, it is due to their education. Women are taught to conceal and men to reveal their true watures from the cradle up. Women are taught that the world expects them to be statues of decorum, and that it is merciless to the one who by word, atmosphere, or act indicates that she could step down from her pedestal.

Man is taught that he is a human being of varied passions, liable to fall into error, which the world quickly forgets and forgives. He tells the truth about his nature and his temptations, and the world listens, sympathizes, and admires. Woe unto the woman who, no matter how free from sin, confesses to her best friends that she has ever in thought even been stirred from her role of absolute decorum. She is forever more branded "doubtful." Consequently she hides from the world, and, if necessary, lies to conceal her real human self from detection. I have heard the objection offered that if we all speak absolute truth we must speak ill of many people. I do not believe it. There is no human being so depraved that good cannot be spoken of him. It would be an interesting experience if we should all experiment for an entire month in finding the excellent quality to mention in each person we meet, and keeping silence concerning his or her faults.

Silence, however, is often made to serve as the helpless handmaid of liars. I can imagine no more despicable lie than the one conveyed by silence when speech is needed to defend the reputation of some victim of malice or envy. Many a name has been shadowed by the significant silent lie of one who should have spoken the word of defence. I am afraid this is a phase of falsehood more feminine than masculine.

Liars, like poets, are more frequently born than made, but certain methods of education can increase or cure the malady. It is said that several of our great novelists were terrible liars in childhood. Their vivid imaginations portrayed events and scenes which they related as actual occurrences. Utilized in fiction, their inborn propensity to exaggerate common events became valuable to the lovers of exciting

A child should be taught to consider a slight prevarication as a departure from morality and strict truthfulness of speech, even in trivial matters, as one of the highest

However lightly we may speak of telling "white lies," we all feel an instinctive respect for the man or woman who has won a reputation for sincere truthfulness, and we have only to build our own lives on the same foundation to be regarded in the same many friends of Rev. Mr. Meyer here will sympathize with him in his sad bereavement. A methodist minister of Pittsburg wrote us this week : "Kindly give our tea-meeting a local advertisement and charge for it as an advertisement, for I do not want a church under my charge to do any dead heading. It may seem strange, but this simple and manly offer to pay fair price for an undoubted service is rare and refreshing. For once the paper is not screwed down to quarter its rates for the circulation of appeals to public generosity.

The Caristmas Market. There was not as large a market this morning as has been customary in previous years. This was due to the fact that Thurs day's market was preferred by many farmers. It gave them a chance to sell their produce and make their purchases with more freedom. However, the square, Brock and Wellington streets were, covered with waggons. Tons of turkeys, geese, and chickens were secured, and at cheaper rates than bave been asked for the past week. There was any amount of meat sold, and other knicknacks, that will be useful in making the holiday a happy and appetising day.
