Sudden Death at Bath.

Mr. P. T. McManus, of Bath, Ont., died suddenly at Cardinal, of heart disease, aged 74 years. He was very ingenious, deeply intelligent, one of Canada's best mathematicians, and his remarkable courtesy won for him many friends. Three of his children hold high reputations as teachers, and the highly esteemed and deeply lamented Mrs. A. Staley, who died last summer, was also his daughter. The divine invitation in that form is a sad shock to his family and many friends.

Mrs. Kyle, Toronto, wife of W. Kyle, at present confined in the Kingston penitentiary, has received a telegram from Dr. Lavell, warden, denying the statement that her husband was in a despondent condition or was subjected to hard labour in the prison. Kyle, according to the warden, is employed in the library, is in good spirits, and as happy as a man could be under the circumstances attending his confinement.

To Cure a Corn.

There is no lack of so-called cures for the common ailment known as corns. The vegetable, animal and mineral kingdoms have been ransacked for cures. It is a simple matter to remove corns without pain, for if you will go to any druggist or medicine dealer and buy a bottle of Putnam's Painless Corn Extractor and apply it as directed the thing is done. Get "Putnam's" and no other.

A Dividend At Last.

The county treasurer has received a dividend of $96 on the stock held by Frontenac county in the Waterloo & Sydenham joint stock road company. This is the first dividend paid in eleven years, though the public loan of $2,000 had meanwhile been repaid.

THE NEWS OF THE WORLD

AN EARLY SETTLEMENT AT WASHINGTON EXPECTED.

The French Cable Company Mailed in Damages—Mr. Harrington's Sentence Confirmed—Return of Mr. Spurgeon to London.

LONDON, Jan. 9.—The French Tribunal of Commerce has delivered a judgment ordering the French Cable Company to fill the conditions of its agreement with the Anglo-American Company, pay all costs and ascertain the amount of damage per day for each day's delay in carrying out the agreement. It is supposed that 2000 francs per day from the time of its attempted withdrawal, Jan. 1, 1887, until the date of its return, will have to be paid by the French Company. The latter will appeal.

The editor of The Kerry Sentinel, Mr. Timothy Harrington, was placed on trial to-day on the charge of having published in his paper reports of meetings of suppressed branches of the National League. Mr. Harrington was convicted of the offence and sentenced to six weeks' imprisonment. Notice of appeal was given. Mr. Corcoran, publisher of The Cork Examiner, was also tried to-day for the same offence and sentenced to two months' imprisonment without hard labour. He will also appeal.

The bulk of the Abyssinian army, under the leadership of Ras Michael, is concentrated in the district of Ayame, and will advance by the Komah Torrent, the route taken by the British Magdala expedition.

There was a long conference held to-day between Lord Harrington and Lord Salisbury on the Local Government Bill. To meet the objections of his party to the bill the Unionist leader insisted upon the Government adopting numerous amendments.

Trouble has arisen among the Crofters of the Agash District in Invernesshire, Scotland. About 1000 landless Crofters drove the sheep off the farms and resisted to the police and troops who were sent to the scene. Numbers were wounded on both sides.

The Spanish Chamber of Deputies has rejected the proposal of Senor Canovah Del Castillo to increase the transit duties on imported cereals and flour. The proposal was rejected by a vote of 188 to 60. Senor Canovah also advised the early repeal of existing treaties of commerce and other protective treaties. Senor Puigcerver in a speech in behalf of the Government declared emphatically against a revival of protective measures.

THE DRY GOODS QUEEN.

Some of the Characteristics of the Merchant Princess of Paris.

In a Christmas packet from Paris Mrs. Correspondent Crawford sent the following to London Truth: Madame Boucaut was the greatest woman, possibly, of her century. She might have been about 70 when I last saw her, and was full-bosomed, broad-shouldered, fresh, hale active and, though nearly as rich as any Californian Silver King, unable to enjoy the rest she so well earned. She was of short stature, could never have been graceful, but must have had a charming face when young. In old age it was pleasant to the eye, and still gave the idea of abounding life. The eye at first seemed sharply, and then beamed out good nature. Madame Boucaut at the time I speak of was a widow, and wore widow's mourning, but of a mitigated sort. She was of homely speech and address, but not vulgar. All the administration of the great Universal Provider was known to her, and she kept a close eye to all its departments. When she lost her husband she felt as if she had got into a world out of joint and void, but would not yield to her temptation to despair. The son, who was wanting in the great qualities of father and mother, set up before her married as the "banker" of a Neapolitan princess of non-royal birth, who is now seeing life as a globe-trotter, and seeking, it may be, adventures. Madame Boucaut not long ago settled £30,000 apiece on each of this lady's children and paid her a lump sum to place them in a school of the old lady's choosing.

The pet charity of this Dry Goods Queen was an old man's asylum near her own beautiful suburban place at Fontenay aux Roses. What I am going to repeat is not flattering to the sex whose rights are women's wrongs. Said Madame Boucaut: "There's nothing so helpless and in the way as an old man, whereas an old woman can always eke out a livelihood somehow, and she can get selfish relatives not to grudge her a place on the hearth by her natural activity and her sympathy with her grandchildren. With them she is really never old, and her tongue wags early all the time that she knits, or mends, or peters about the cooking stove, or nurses the baby. But the poor, stiff-limbed old man! God help him! I have my own father and grandfather still before my eyes, and my mother, too, who laundered and ironed until one day she sat down and went out, like a runaway candle, of old age."

This great woman had a charity budget larger than the civil list allowance of no matter what queen or empress consort. Her pen was always upon her check-book, and she thought nothing of making a gift of thousands of pounds. Nay, she could, without hanging back, sign one for £100,000 or £150,000. Her minor charities for some years were never under £70,000 a year, and few but those they helped or her accountants knew how they money went. She looked upon herself as a stewardess by providential appointment for the good of the poor of the vast fortune which she possessed.

The priests of the Irish Church here were the agents of the Dry Goods Queen in finding her counter-assistants. Irish girls, according to her experience, had good morals, perception, taste and pliability, and they smartened up quickly, owing to their natural intelligence.

Madame Boucaut held two-thirds of the entire shares of the Bon Marche after she turned it into a joint stock company, and £20,000 a year out of the general profits for her rest. The other third was owned by her staff, which was enabled to buy it through gifts she and her husband made them, amounting in all to £300,000. Nobody, to the very humblest in that establishment, is unpaid for. The shareholders are debarred from selling shares to outsiders, or retaining them if they retire. This woman was a country laundress' daughter. Her early hits were due to her taste in making up lots of damaged silk and stuff into fancy articles. She bought a good deal of land near Cannes, and was planning a winter asylum for poor old people when she was carried away by sudden congestion of the lungs.

Mr. W. J. Hawker, Bonnemouth, says: "To me, a Warwickshire man, the most conclusive proof that Shakespeare wrote 'Antony and Cleopatra' is the line in which Antony salutes the 'Serpent of the Nile' as 'my chuck.' This term of endearment is still heard among the peasantry of the Midland counties; and to suppose that a classical scholar, such as Bacon, should have introduced such a homely provincialism, so English, and so utterly destructive of the unities, into an Egyptian tragedy is so improbable that I pin my faith to the Stratford butcher's inspired son as the author of that robust imagery rather than to the mantle of the great but pedantic Verulam."
