WHAT SHALL WE WEAR?

BLOW BUT SURE GROWTH OF THE "UNION" OR "HEALTH" GARMENT.

Fashions for Ladies' Underclothing in London and in New York—Great Diversity of Styles in Bonnets Designed for Midwinter.

Bonnets for midwinter include not only many styles, but styles showing great extremes, such as tulle and flower bonnets and velvet bonnets trimmed with fur. This diversity appears to be a necessity, some ladies of fashion must have a bonnet for every occasion if not absolutely one for every gown.

FUR TRIMMED CLOTH COSTUME.

For the theatre and other evening occasions are graceful affairs of lace, tulle, flowers and feathers. To wear with cloth suits are new cloth bonnets or turbans. These are trimmed, as a rule, to correspond with the costume, as is illustrated in the cut. The fine, blue cloth dress and pelrine are trimmed with Persian lamb or Astrakhan and braid. The cloth hat of exact color of the suit has a brim of Astrakhan, and an Astrakhan muff completes the stylish costume. Russian sable is much used as a trimming to winter bonnets, and it often seems that the whole crown is of fur, though, as a rule, the fur composes the brim only.

WINTER BONNETS.

In the second cut is shown an imported winter bonnet of exceedingly stylish shape. It is of scarlet velvet. The velvet, arranged in plaits going upward, covers the crown of this bonnet and provides the plaited trimming in front. A demi-wreath of green glossy feathers, crowned above with a feather aigrette, and a bow and strings of ribbon four and three-quarter inches wide, shot with red and green, give the fashionable ornamentation.

Night Dresses and Under Linen.

In London, it appears, there is a decided tendency to color in the wear of night dresses and under linen, and many of the leading houses sell sets of these to match, including the two necessary articles of daily wear and the night dress. Some very pretty ones are in cambric with fine narrow lines of colors. In New York, ladies, as a rule, prefer the articles mentioned in white linen, muslin or percale; the color in their underwear being confined to fanciful petticoats, silk corsets and the pretty ribbon trimmings on their under linen. Colored stockings, as all our readers know, are worn everywhere. Silk skirts, lined with flannel, are very fashionably worn instead of the ordinary flannel petticoats. Under silk petticoats, not lined with flannel, or quilted flannel petticoats, in broad, contrasting stripes, are worn; these are generally edged with a rather thick washing lace or embroidery.

Reform, or Health Garments.

The undergarments and health waists introduced to the public a dozen or more years ago under the general name of "reform garments" have met with exceedingly slow growth, still they have made some advance. At the present time the union garments, in wool, silk and muslin, share favor with the two-piece garments. The former have been adopted by many because of their comfort, convenience and economy; by others they are patronized to some extent with the idea that one's stays and bodice fit more snugly above them than with the two-piece underwear.

Echoes from the World of Fashion.

From Paris comes word that "tight lacing, large bustles and the high hat are doomed." Hussar jackets are worn for demi toilet. Among recent novelties in tea gowns is noted one of cream colored China silk, trimmed with fluffy gray fur and a profusion of yellow ribbon.

O'BRIEN AT TULLAMORE.

A Vigorous Speech on the Lash Struggle His Prison Experience.

DUBLIN, Jan. 20.—William O'Brien looks denote that his constitution is shattered, and his physicians insist that he should go to the south of France for the benefit of his health. The people of Tullamore have presented Mr. O'Brien with an address in which they say that they are indifferent to the coercion law, but that Mr. Balfour's execution of the law is brutal and a disgrace to the government. Mr. O'Brien arrived in this city this evening. He was greeted at the railway station by an immense crowd, which included many members of parliament and a large number of priests. On alighting from the train he entered the lord mayor's carriage and was driven to a hotel, followed by a long procession. The paraders carried torches and marched to the music of several bands. Many houses along the route were brilliantly illuminated and bonfires blazed in all parts of the town. On arriving at the hotel Mr. O'Brien made a brief speech. His voice was very hoarse. He said that he rejoiced that, in spite of the efforts of Mr. Balfour, the Irish were stronger than ever. Although the English were slow in joining them they would be slow in deserting them. The Irish would not resort to outrage but would follow Parnell and Gladstone, trusting to the democracy of Great Britain to make Ireland a nation. Mr. O'Brien received many congratulatory telegrams in the course of the day, some coming from America. In several Irish towns garlands were hastily hung across the streets in his honor, and in the evening there were processions, illuminations, etc.

DUBLIN, Jan. 21.—In his speech at Tullamore Mr. William O'Brien said: One of the addresses you have presented referred in specially generous terms to the struggle which we have been endeavoring to make, against the attempt to turn political imprisonment to the basest political uses for the purposes of blackening and dishonoring the representatives of the Irish people in the eyes of England. (A voice—They will never do it, Mr. O'Brien.) From the beginning I regarded Mr. Balfour's boast, that he would sink us to the level of criminals, as a piece of calculated brutality (cheers), as a part of the deliberate policy of defamation which unscrupulous men are carrying on against us in England, not because they believe in it, but as a piece of base party tactics and manoeuvres. (Cheers.) I believe it to be simply a new and more truculent form of the Parnellism and crime policy of the London Times (groans) and I believe it would have been base in us if we had lain down submissively under an infamy of that sort. (Cheers.) As it happened the lot fell to me first and I did what thousands of Irishmen would have done if it had fallen to their lot. (Cheers.) I gave full and free public notice that, so long as my life remained, I would not wear criminal uniform; that I would not associate with criminals, and that I would not perform any task that was unworthy of an honest man and representative of the Irish people. (Cheers.) I will only say—and I do not say it in a boasting spirit—that I think I may claim that I have kept my word, and although I have no doubt that we have still a good deal of suffering and dogged fighting before us, I believe that the protest we have maintained, and the voice of English opinion and of English discussion have already broken the neck of Balfour's base prison legislation scheme. (Loud cheers.)

DEATH IN THE STORM.

A Heroic Father Saves His Boy—Children Out in the Blizzard.
Winona Republican.

The death of Robert Chambers is the most pathetic reported of the storm. He and his two sons, one 9 years old and the other 11, went together one mile distant to water some cattle. Mr. Chambers was on foot, and each of the boys had a horse. The father, seeing indications of the storm, sent the older boy immediately home, as he is troubled with rheumatism. The older boy reached home in safety. Mr. Chambers and Johnny undertook to drive the cattle home. They were soon bewildered and lost Johnny who lived through the storm and not so badly frozen as first represented tells what followed. He says that when his father said that they were lost he made a place in the snow for him and wrapped him up the best he could. They had no overcoats or extra clothing. Johnny says that he was so covered up that he was warm. His father went out and called and the St. Bernard dog barked, but no answer came. Then the father and the dog got into the snow beside him. While he was warm he knew that his father was getting very cold. He urged his father to go on and find the trees and then he could make the house, but the father said: "No, I can not go and leave you here." The boy urged, but the father would do no more than call for aid within certain reach of the boy's bed of snow. The dog also kept with the boy. Through the long night they had conversations about perishing, but the father kept assuring the boy that they would get through all right if he would only be sure and lie still. The boy knew his father was freezing, but was quite comfortable, and finally fell asleep. When he awoke it was evidently near morning. His father was still alive, and, discovering that Johnny was awake, his father said to him: "Now, Johnny, you pray and I will pray, and then I know that God will take you through all right." They prayed as proposed, and soon after his father was dead. The boy was entirely covered, except a little breathing through the snow, and he lay still. The dog stood sentry and afforded the clue by which the bodies were found soon after daylight by a searching party. Johnny thinks his father had not been dead more than an hour when they were found. The boy's hands and feet are only slightly frozen.

There isn't much to say about the heroic school teachers who are stifled by the breath of the Dakota blizzard, as they seek to pilot their little ones to a haven of safety, but the memory of such faithful women will be green even after man has discovered means to avert the blizzard itself. Mary Connell, a school teacher near Cavour, started home with two of her pupils, a boy and girl. The boy left them and perished. Miss Connell put her dress folds about the little girl and made her walk all night sheltering her charge with her body. They were found next day alive, but terribly frozen. Another teacher, Miss Jacobson, near Stolof, started home with a little girl and both perished. When found Miss Jacobson was crouched in a little hollow in the ground with her arms about the little girl and her dress skirt was wrapped about her. Her own bonnet was off her head and her hand clutched her dress at her throat, but there was a smile on her face. Two children, a boy and a girl of Joseph Hutchinson, near Gary, were lost going home from school. Twenty-five men at once started on a search for them and the mother couldn't be kept from going along. The poor woman was with the party who found them. They were lying close together and the boy had his sister's hands between his own.
