ham, "xoa are not annoyed or analy with me-with us, I mean, for coming?" "Who should I be!" replied Tulita, with dignity. "It is of no consequence."

"May I hope, then, that you will wante the lavender sticks for me? I will call for them. of course," said Mr. Brown. "I will make some more for sale at the news stand," replied Tulita; "no doubt you can get them there," Having administered which little cut

Tulita turned her big dark eyes severely upon the still tarrying Mr. Benton. Brown, convinced now that their visit had displeased the young lady, also turned and glared at the cause of his discomfiture. What was their surprise to find that Mr. Benton had reseated himself and that he and the senora had apparagray launched into an extended con-1.6.17.75

"Line you coming, Benton" said Brown, in atly.

"In a minute, my dear fellow," replied his friend; "I have just discovered that Mrs. Lanayarita and I have a whole lot of mutual friends up in San Francisco." .

And the senora herself, turning to her daughter, confirmed this in quite an animated way, repeating several names, evidently those of the friends referred to.

Then Mr. Brown's eyes sought Tulita's with such solemn protest that she in her turn could not help smiling. Common politeness forced her to say, "Will you not sit down?" But no, Mr. Brown would not sit down; he preferred to do penance standing. Then he looked so unhappy, casting gloomy glances at his friend, which that gentleman ignored, that Tulita finally began to feel a little pity for the young man. Perhaps she had been too severe. After all he was very evidently a gentleman, and was not-bad looking, and he had the good taste to appreciate her lavender sticks. And so, after a little hesitation, she ventured to ask him if he was a stranger in San Diego. She almost laughed again to see how grateful he looked for this bit of condescension. In fact this young man was so modest and courteous-so different from his companion, for instance-it was really a pleasure to encourage him a little. Then gradually Mr. Brown ceased to cast remonstrative glances at his friend, and presently, when he saw that he was keeping Miss Lunavarita standing, he consented to sit

It was growing dark when Mr. Brown again arose to his feet and exclaimed, peremptorily, "Come, Bonton, we must go! I don't know what Mrs. Lunavarita and her daughter will think of us."

Now, even if Mrs. Lunavarita's daughter had cared to give expression to her thoughts just then, she was the next moment rendered speechless by her mother's behavior. Giving Mr. Benton her hand as he bade her good night, the senora said, in a pleased and most vivacious manner, "Good night, senor, 1 shall look for you to-morrow at 10 o'clock, and then we will take our little ride."

After leaving the house Mr. Benton and Mr. Brown plodded along through the dusk and dust in silence for some minutes. Then Mr. Benton said, "Women are strange creatures," To which trite remark his companion made no reply. But, having arrived at the end of his reflections, and broken the sileace, Mr. Benton continued: "Do you remember my telling you, Frank, that I had a sort of superstition that your $3 investment was going to bring us luck!" And as Brown assented, with a nod of his head, "Well, I think it has, though I had no idea when I inquired the name of your friends, of the people next door, that the luck was all ready, laid away in lavender, as it were, waiting for us to come and get it. Mrs. Lunavarita has 200 or 300 acres of land over on the sea shore. What do you think of that! It is the same old story. They once owned leagues and this is all they have left, and they have got that, as Mrs. Lunavarita says, because it is not worth anything, although she is wrong there. At any rate she is holding it for her daughter, hoping that it may be worth something some day. It is all they have got. Two thousand dollars is the highest figure she has thought of. If it is anything like she describes it, and if she will let me handle it, I propose to make it worth $100,-000 in the next year."

"Look here, Tom," said Brown, impulsively, "if you do get hold of this thing, you will do the best you can by Mrs. Lunavarita, won't

"My dear fellow," said Mr. Benton in a rather cold tone, "is it necessary to ask me that! I am not a devourer of widows and orphans." "You know I did not mean anything like

"Oh, hang it, don't be touchy," said Brown. that. Only these two women are so lonely, and innocent, and plucky, they really have made quite an impression on me."

"I noticed that one of them seemed to," replied Mr. Benton, dryly, "but I did not observe the other had. As for the proposition, if everything turns out as I expect, it was a lucky day for Mrs. Lunavarita when I knocked at her door. And now let us quit work for the day, and go and have a respectable dinner as a send off for the new fi. . . of Benton & Brown, real estate dealers."

A year and a half have elapsed. It is Christmas Eve. Once more Tulita is watching the sun set, but this time from another home, where Point Loma does not intervene its huge bulk, where she can see the golden disc slipping down between the blue of the Pacific and the blue of the evening sky, until the last burnished tip disappears. Then the soft warm air is filled with rich color as the afterglow stains sky and water with its hues. Turning away, Tulita proceeds with her occupation of gathering roses which this celestial pageant had interrupted, while the air grows heav, with their perfume. Behind Tulita is a large so called "Queen Anne" cottage, and on the veranda sits her mother, lazily rocking and fanning herself. Next to the senora sits an elderly gentleman, and on the back of the elderly gentleman's chair leans Mr. Brown, of Philadelphia. As Tulita passes the side of the porch, she dexterously tosses a rose to the elderly gentleman, and laughs, as he successfully catches it, and presses it to his lips with a gallant bow.

"Well, well, well," he says, breaking the silence, "imagine being out of door without a wrap, gathering roses on Christmas Eve. And you really mean to tell me, Frank, that this place has been set out only a year?"

"Yes, sir," replied the young man, "just about. You see, father, in this country water is everything. If you can only get plenty of water, things grow like magic. I remember that is what worried us most when we put Lanavarita town lots on the market, water was the great question, and we were afraid we would have to pipe it from town. But as soon as we struck that artesian well we were fixed. The property doubled in value in twenty-four hours, and we sold enough lots the first week to pay for laying out the town, putting down water and sewer pipes, and subsidizing a street car line to run a motor out here. After that the people used to come and stand in line all day long at our office waiting to buy lots. We raised the price religiously on the first of each month, and now you can't buy a lot in Lunavarita for less than $300. Water is king in California. There is a company formed to flume it down from the mountains about sixty miles from here;

15.13 a good scheme, too," "It must cost a great deal," said the elder

The Erown, doubtfully. "Oh, no," said his son, "a million ought to do it." "A mere trifle," said the old gentleman, minicking Frank's airy tone. "Upon my coul," he continued, with sudden energy, "if I may here much longer I shall be as stark, ciaring mad as all of the rest of you are. Why, there tell me that that peninsula over there. with that all radly big hotel, which they will rate fall in the world"-"All of the rooms are and already," murmured Frank, but his inter, with a snort of incredulity, procool "without heeding him-"with its and its zoological gardering to laknows what, begging your . I have, they tell me that that was as a deart last year. I don't believe w. W.L. Clieve it!

"My dear father," said his son, "two or three years ago San Diego itself was little more than that-you, could have bought pretty near the whole place for a short bit. But a railroad came in here and that brought people, and when the world at large began to find out what a magnificent harbor"-

"There, there!" exclaimed bis father, hastily, "don't get started now. I have heard all about the harbor."

"And the glorious climate?" "Yes," said Mr. Brown, emphatically, "and the climate, too."

"I am afraid you den't appreciate it, though," said his son, reproachfully. -"Just think of the Boston east wind to-night and compare it with this air, where you can feel your lungs grow. Why, I believe I have sprouted an extra one myself since I have been here "

"I believe that you have, my dear boy," said the old gentleman, chuckling, "from the amount of talking that you do, I believe that you have. Eh, senora, I rather think I got him there? Did you hear that, Tulita, my dear? Ha! ha! ha!"

At this moment a carriage was seen coming up the hill toward the house.

"Ah!" cried Tulita, "here comes Aladdin." The carriage stopped, and Benton descended. Tulita, waving the bunch of roses before his face, bade him good evening. "Well, sir," said the elder Mr. Brown, "and how many towns have you built today?" "Not many," sa.d Benton, laughing. Then drawing from his coat pocket a package of papers, he handed it to Mr. Brown, saying: "Here are your deeds and abstracts; they are all right!"

"What!" shouted Frank. "Father, have you"-but here he burst out laughing. "Father," he continued, regaining his gravity, "father, look me in the eye. Is it possible that you, you, a conservative merchant of Philadelphia, have, at the present ruinous prices, been indulging in wild, insane speculation, that you"-

"There, there, Master Frank," said his father, joining in the laughter; "we all know that you have sprouted an extra lung." "Don't mind him, Mr. Brown," said Benton. "You have got a bargain. As soon as you get your vines well under way one year's crop of raisin grapes will pay for it." "Oh, of course, of course," said the old gentleman, "it is a bargain. They all are. Though to my mind," he continued, putting his arm around Tulita and drawing her to southern California." "Yes," said his son, looking at his wife proudly, "and to think that I only had to put his side, "this is the best bargain ever got in up $3 for the option." "Men are so conceited," said Tulita, confidingly to her father-in-law; "that was not the way of it at all. It was I who gave a dozen lavender sticks for a husband and the town of Lunavarita."

"GRANDMA" GARFIELD.

President Garfield's Mother, Whose Death Has Just Been Recorded.

Eliza Garfield (Eliza Ballou), mother of James A. Garfield, whose death was recently announced, came of a Huguenot family that fled from France to New England after the revocation of the edict of Nantes in 1685. She was born in New Hampshire and married Abram Garfield, a native of New York, but of Massachusetts ancestry, having descended from Edward Garfield, an English Puritan, who, in 1630, was one of the founders of Watertown.

Mrs. Garfield removed with her husband-to Ohio in 1830, and settled in what was then known as the "Wilderness," but now the "Western Reserve," which was being occupied by people from Connecticut. The pioneer died at the age of 33, leaving a widow with four small children, of whom James, destined to become president of the United States, was

MRS. GARFIELD. the youngest. Then commenced one of those struggles of a mother, left without the strong arm of man, to live and to bring up her children. The family dwelt in a log cabin, and endured the privations of a frontier life. However, it is probable that the fatherless family got on among the rude but open handed and open hearted frontiersmen far better than might have been the case in a more cultivated community. All were bound together in a common struggle to force the virgin soil to grant a living, and nowhere are women so thoroughly respected and assisted in need as in new countries. The children assisted their mother, and James helped to provide for the family wants by working on the neighboring farms.

The rising fortunes of the son, first a teacher in a log school house, professor, congressman, general leader in the national house of representatives, then president, of course caused a great, though slow, change in the life of the mother. The early hardships of a frontier life were followed by comfort and an absorbing interest in the career of the distinguished son. It must have been a proud day when Eliza Garfield sat in a chair on the portico of the Capitol at Washington and distened while James A. Garfield, her son, and an incoming president of the United States, delivered his maugural address. When the president had finished speaking to the people of the United States he turned and saluted his venerable mother with a kiss.

There came another great change in the life of the woman so closely knit with the fortunes of the man. Assassination startled the nation and brought affliction and disappointment to a household, at its very entrance upon a harvest of all that, had been sewn during thirty years.

After the death of her president son Eliza Garfield lived quietly with his family. She was 86 years old, and during her last illness was constantly watched by her oldest daughter, Mrs. Trowbridge, and her son, Thomas Garfield, now a man of 66. Mrs. J. A. Garfield is in Europe with her eldest son and her daughter.
