GALLOWAY'S GREETING

Peace on earth, good will towards men, Is the theme of our earthly song; Peace on earth, good will towards men Should mould our actions all day long.

h should lead us think how best to bring The happy smile, the cheerful ring Of laughter to the cheerless hearth, And thus make glad this dreary earth.

The way is plain: see GALLOWAY'S Furs, There neither cats skin, sheep, nor curs, But just the thing to keep your warm ; To keep you free from cold and storm, Which must bring peace in this cold clime. And make your Christmas a happy time.

The Knights of Labor-Resisting Under the Cloud of a Misleading Title-"Sir Walker," of Kansas-Room for the Woman and Give Her a Chance-Fate of a Tragic Writer.

(Copyrighted, 1888.) There Snall Re No More Knights.

Queer ideas we nineteenth-century people have about names and titles. Take this Murray & Taylor's great organization of workingmen, the hard-working, industrious toilers of our land—the working, industrious toilers of our land-the knights of labor. Could inspiration suggest a name more misleading and inapprepriate? If there was anything in the world that the plumed knight didn't do it was work. . ! there was one thing that he considered degrading it was honest toil. If there was a creature in all the world for which he had a profound contempt, it was a workingman. He called the honest laborer a hind, a churl, base born, ignoble, a clown. He believed that the workingman was made of coarser clay than the knight of gentle blood. I think he even doubted if the laborer had a soul. A cowardly, quarrelsome, harddrinking, bragging thieving, "high-born" knave, who barricaded himself and his horse in a ton of armour plating, and with a lance twenty feet long rode into a mob of halfnaked wretches armed with bows and arrows, and called it war. Why, the honest, brave, toiling workers of to-day, free-born Also Remember the Big Job men, should want to call themselves "knights," rather than yoemen, I don't know. Ah! brethren, the Englishman isn't the only man who "dearly loves a lord." We seem to love even the faded reminiscence of one.

Why, out in Emporia, Kan., while I was waiting for a "thunderbolt train" that was six hours late, a voice called into the waiting-room, "Sir Walter!" and "Sir Walter" said "Hey?" and got up. I observed "Sir Walter." The grim old knight wore a sword-belt three sizes too small for him, and Call early as they are going his rapier hung down between his legs. His boots were the ruddy hue of boots that shuddered at the scent of blacking; large, roomy, many wrinkled boots they were, and the soil of the Kansas corn-field clung to them in gouts and patches. His black pantaloons, scant in the lean pattern of a bygone day, bagged fearfully at the bunched and bony knees, and his black frock-coat was a nightmare. But Sir Walter's hat was the hat of a plumed knight, and it lent to his grizzled face and bony figure the the university, followed by a general closing genial aspect of a scarecrow that had gone through a millinery store. "Sir Walter" ooked a moment for a convenient corner, but finding none, turned his face toward the stove, projected his underlip a scant half-inch, and with one sibilant, well-directed shot put out the fire, tossed his now useless quid in after it, and without pausing to gaze upon the ruin, followed "Sir George" out of the door. They were knights of something - omniscient providence only knows what but they were Knights. And, possibly, Barons. They looked barren.

Room For The Woman! "Give the woman a chance!" shouts the Woman's Journal. All right, woman, here's the saw; there's a piece of bacon-rind on the chopping-block right by the sawbuck; two cuts to a stick makes it exactly kitchenstove length; rest your knee on the middle of the stick, and be careful that you don't catch the saw in your skirts. You can have a chance at it from now till dinnertime, while the men go down to the grocery and talk politics or listen to old Sammy Stammerwheezle try to read last week's paper.

It Was A Tragedy.

"Have you read my seven-act tragedy I left with you last week?" asked young George Aristophanes, the leading American humorist, uncovering his head before the manager. "I have," replied the great man, "but I don't see why you call it a tragedy. It reads more like a farce." Ah ! yes, but it is a tragedy, and a fearful one. You see, the idea is, we lock the doors, and the audience dies about the middle of the third act." "Not if I can save them!" howled the indignant manager, who wanted to save his audiences to buy a steam-yacht with them, and with one vicious stab he thrust a $10 bill into the humorist's hand. The unhappy man gave one horrified glance at it, and fell dead upon the floor. The manager calmly withdrew the fatal bill and sold the body to a neighboring medical college for $40. Everything always favors the manager that truly loves his audiences.

And bowing low, honest Tom Benbolt, better known as "The People's Friend," put his trip ticket in a large pocketbook which he carried for that purpose, and went home to write a corker on the blood-sucking corporations, that, like hideous vampires, are drinking the blood of a sleeping nation, a nation lulled into fatal slumber by open intimidation and secret bribes. And it's dollars to Watch-dog of Liberty, is going to work himself into congress on the anti-monopoly FANCY racket long before he wears out his trip

What It Is coming To.

"Juliet," said Romeo, looking up with a troubled voice on his brow, "I see here among my bills one for $63 for those Christmas presents your mother sent you, one for $85 for the one your fathersent you, another for $110 for the gold watch your Uncle George gave you, and sundry smaller bills for various presents sent you by other relatives. May I ask, in the name of sweet Saint Gall, why these bills are sent to me? How is it, my soul? "Oh, Romeo," she exclaimed impatiently, 'it's all right, only you can't understand these things. Our tamily is so large, you known, that we just organized a Christmas trust this year. See?" And Romeo said he thought he

We Believe Him.

Dr. Elliott Coues says he has an "astral form," and can easily be in two places six thousand miles apart at the same time. We always knew that all these Theosophists had incomplete forms of this kind. That is, they are astral forms and brains - with the 'tral" left out. Still, if their bodies are not double, their language is.

RUSSIAN OPPRESSION.

The Attack of the Students-Tyranny Practiced as it Was Never Before. LONDON, Jan. 27.—Owing to the most absolute official censure it has been impos sible to transmit news of a political character across the Russian frontier.

The first of a series of letters that lifts the mask of autocratic Russian despotism has arrived from the hands of a prominent Russian refugee.

It says that "disturbances" took place at of the universities of all the principal cities. With one stroke of the autocrat's pen every chair of our universities has been vacated temporarily.

The latest persecution began in Moscow in Katkoff's last month. Some 1,600 students had, in common with their brethren all over the country, been subjected to the galling espionage of a creature installed by the government as inspector at the Katkoff univer-

It was resolved to brand the miserable cur in so effectual a manner that his mean profession would be known wherever he went. An intrepid and noble-hearted youth drew the lot and started at once to execute our common vengeauce. He had the design of a Russian 100 rouble bill, with its seven rainbow colors, chemically impregnated on the palm of his hand, and equip-Led with a solution with which he at the proper moment could moisten the drawing and thus make it transferable. Syniawsky entered the lecture hall, taking a position near to the hated government spy, Brezga-loff. At a given signal the student dealt him a powerful blow with the open hand on his cheek, branding him with the 100 rouble stamp, the composition of which had been made so that it remains impregnated in the skin as well as if the fellow had been ta tooed by a Polynesian islander.

The professor was attacked and a squad of police dashed against the students and a furious fight took place.

Next morning proclamations were scattered broadcast requesting all students to assemble in front of the 'Strastnoi Monastir,' a cloister situated on a hollow square. The circulars bore no signature, nor did it appear clearly for what purpose the meeting was to be held, but no one suspected foul play in the general excitement. The students accordingly approached unarmed, in the belief that the affair was meant to be a simple demonstration of rallying strength. Their illusion, however, was quickly dispelled. As a thunderbolt from a clear sky came the clattering of iron roofs; and an overwhelming force of Cossacks, with pothe circular had been formed to entrap

With sabres and daggers, a frightful and hands of the students. One poor youth had his tongue torn out by the root. The janitors from the neighboring houses cried like children with pity as they came out to help the wounded.

Two students were killed on the square. Three died within an hour after the onslaught. The Moscow students sought the governorgeneral, asking him for permission to bury their dead.

Young Syniawsky, who branded the hireling spy with the trade mark for which he sold his honour as a man, has received a three years' sentence in the disciplinarian battalion of the army, a body made up entirely of criminals. Twenty four students, including tive Hebrews, were expelled from the university; the Hebrews, according to a decree of March, 1882, with the provision that they can never be admitted to another university in Russia, and about 175 of the flower of Russian youth are to be punished with banishment or imprisonment as soon as they are sufficiently recovered to leave the hospital and stand trial for "insurrection."
