Private letters from Spain repeat the rumours which we noticed several weeks ago of an application having been actually made by the deposed monarch, Charles IV. to the Sovereigns at Aix la Chapelle for their assistance in the recovery of his Throne. They add, that he had authorised his friends to signify, that if he should be able to resume the Crown, he would immediately put an end to a war calculated to bring misery and ruin upon the country, without any chance of accomplishing the purpose in view—and that he had signified his positive intention to acknowledge the independence of the revolted colonies, and by amicable negotiations, to secure as early as possible a commercial intercourse with them, and indeed to render it exclusively in favor of Old Spain, in return for so great a boon. The deposed King, it is further said, had declared, that the Prince of Peace, as he was styled, shall never pollute the soil of Spain any more; that ne will yield to the enlightened spirit of the happiness of the people, and the improvement of the Government, according to the counsels of the wisest statesmen that the country affords, and who are most likely to possess the confidence of the people. It is intimated that measures in favour of Charles have been some time in agitation, and are too well digested and too powerfully supported for Ferdinand to be able to resist them.

The accounts from St. Petersburgh inform us, that the great demand there for gold and silver bullion is begining to decrease; the government is willing to take the gold, but having no longer the same pressing occasion for it as formerly, will not agree to pay for it before July next, thus requiring a credit of more than six months; this condition is an effectual damp to speculations in bullion, which may therefore be expected to go in search of a better market.

The letters of Junius have been given to o many distinguished characters, and among the rest the late Sir Philip Francis, upon proof presumptive, that more con-clusive evidence must be produced, before the question can be fairly set at rest. The preface to the trial of Lord GEORGE SACK-VILLE, afterwards Lord GEORGE GER-MAIN, was certainly written by Junius; one person, a Nobleman, long since dead was supposed to have known who the writer really was, and that Nobleman, in his life time communicated the secret to his present Majesty.

Letters from Amsterdam state, that a commercial establishment which has attracted much notice from the extent of its speculations to the Government securities of France, is at length declared in a state of insolvency. The ruin of this house, which, though not perhaps of the first orthe times, in removing every obstacle to der maintained a very high rank at Amsterdam, is chiefly to be ascribed to those speculations of the magnitude of which some idea may be formed by stating that at the period it held 4,000,000 of renies, forming a capital of 80,000,000 of francs; and that every fall of one per cent, that took place in the funds, constituted a difference of more than 40,000l. sterling.

Mr. Vanfelson opposed the motion, it being a private bill, and could not be received after fifteen days of the session. He alledged that the ladies of the general hospital at Montreal were interested; their rights therefore might be impaired, when they were defenceless.

Mr. Viger was of the same opinion and

Mr. O'Sullivan and Mr. Sherwood said a few words in favour of Mr, M's. motion.

Mr. Vezina opposed the motion. He made a long speech, consisting however able member who supported the motion; of few propositions. He made remarks merchants left to manage their own conon the petition paragraph by paragraph, cerns, is the best regulation of trade; no and made himself merry on the subject of danger resulted to the fair trader from the city and citizens of montreal: he spoke pedlars, their number does not exceed fiffavorable of what he called the little bo- ty in this Province; there is always danrough of Three Rivers, a part of which he ger in a dereliction of upright and hones had the honour to represent. He denied principle, which the present meast that numerous shipping resorted to montreal, what did go there, passed by Three class of people who were poor, and gained Rivers, and would easily be seen: that new a hard living by small commerce; why tax streets were not wanting in Montreal, to the water; besides it is clearly a private bill, because not for the benefit of the pro-

Mr. Cuvillier alledged that the honora-ole member for Three Rivers had made ridiculous speech. He would appeal to the house if it was to the purpose, and if the gentlemen had spoken one word to the question. What is the question? it is simple, is this a petition of public nature, or a private? can there be a doubt upon the subject? is not a street a highway? is not a highway a public matter? If so, the petition must be received. All that had been said against it at present is premature. Mr. C. did not promise to support such a bill, but he wished that the sacred right of petitioning should not be treated with contempt.

Mr. Taschereau suggested the propriety of referring to a special committee, a bill of this kind, which was carried in the affirmative.

Mr. Vanfelson moved a second reading of a bill to make good the sum of 40263 8s 9d currency, voted on the 26th march last.

Mr. Cuvillier objected, as part of the money had been expended contrary to the estimate laid before the house by the Exe-

Mr, Sherwood suported the motion; he vas not here on the 26th of march last, but he looked at the Journals and saw that the house was solemnly pledged to his majesy's representative to make good that sum: the Journals showed the grant was unconditional for the civil expenditure of the province. The promise without restriction to make it good; any hesitation religiously to fulfil that promise would be ungracious, and illy comport with the good faith ever manifested by the house of commons of Lower Canada.

Mr. Borgia arose with much vivacity, and made some personal allusions to Mr. Sherwood; complained that the house; had used him, Mr. B. ill, in not causing a bill to be read; he made use of the wo crapaud, when Mr. Panet and Mr. Sherwood demanded that the galleries be cleared: this was done, and the house remained with closed doors an hour. They then opened, and the house were upon the same question; after some debate the original motion was put and carried. The year and nays were taken down as follows:

Yeas-messrs. molson, Sherwood, Languedoc, Viger, Panet, M'Cord, Dumont, Caschereau, Jones, Vanfelson, Badeaux, Duchesnois, O'Sullivan, Neilson, Blanch ette, Bruneau, Davidson, Vezina, Cherrier Bellet, Lagueux, Ganvreau, Allsopp, La Combe, La Roi, Dessaulies, E. The bill to make good the sum of 402631 is 9d debated yesterday, brought forward, engrossed, and a third resding moved: the oill was vigorously attacked by its oppo-sers, and Mr Cuvillier moved to recommit it to the special committee. The debate, was lengthy, and the merits of the ques-tion again discussed, the arguments in sub-apparently such as might have been decided in fifteen minutes, occupied all the evening.

Mr Lauguedoc represented pedlars and petty chapmen as highly injurious to the

Mr Panet doubted the propriety of any ncrease of tax, but the present motion was enormous, the only objection to pedlars is selling too cheap; who ever heard before this was a crime? it might displease a certain class called merchants; but we do not legislate for them only, but for the whole province.

Mr. Neilson would carefully guard against any prejudice that might operate unfavourably either to pedlars or to any other part of society: but pedlars had been cousidered fair objects of taxation in every country: the principal is acknowledged upon our statute book, by a tax or

Mr. Viger opposed any augmentation of duty. It was against principles to single out any body of men for excessive and eculiar taxation

Mr Vezina held pedlars in horror; almost all young people who turn vagabond* and leave useful trades: Mr. V. had known a pedlar at Three Rivers convicted of stealing; and suggested the propriety of increasing the duty to 201

Mr Blanchet was of opinion that commerce would be injured unless the hous would protect it by prohibiting these small venders. The fair trader could not resist the competition.
