"In the first arrangements made by His late Majesty, and by Parliament for the Government of Canada, it was their principal care to continue and assure to the inhabitants that provision which the French Government had made for the support of religion, and, accordingly, the Clergy of the Roman Catholic Church were secured in the enjoyment of all their legal and accustomed righta---and, many years afterwards, when the accession of a large English population, particularly in this portion of Canada, rendered it proper to divide the Province, and to make provision for two separate Governments, His Majesty in a Message to Parliament expressly recommended to them to 'consider of such provisions as should be necessary for enabling His Majesty to make a permanent appropriation of Lands in the said Provinces for the supty to make a permanent appropriation of Lands in the said Provinces for the support, and maintenance of a Protestant Clergy within the same."

Clergy within the same."

"Concurring in this recommendation of His Majesty the Parliament of Great Britain by the statute 31st Geo. 3d. chap. 31st., made a provision for the support of a Protestant Clergy in this Province, in the terms of the Royal Message, and they secured it by enactments so direct and positive, and so particular in their details, that there can be no part of the British Empire in which a public provision for the maintenance of religion stands on plainer ground than in the Provinces of Canada.

"It was not until after this provision

than in the Provinces of Canada.

"If was not until after this provision had existed without complaint, or remonstrance for more than thirty years that any attempt was made to excite a feeling of dissatisfaction in respect to it.

"Among the objections which have been urged against it since that period it has been stated that the Reserves by remaining waste obstruct the settlement of the Province, and that the quantity of land reserved is excessive in proportion to the object.

"With respect to the first objection, it has always been exaggerated, and the reasoning in support of it was daily becoming weaker in consequence of the occupation of the Reserves by lessees, even before the measures which have lately been taken for their sale, under the authority of a recent act of the Imperial Parliament.—since they have been thus placed in a course of gradual alienation, there not only remains no fair objection of that kind, but it is in reality a great benefit to the country that respectable emigrants coming at this late period from Europe are enabled, by the opportunity of purchasing these Clergy Reserves, to obtain laude in eligible situations upon convenient and moderate terms." upon convenient and moderate terms."

The last faint beams of sinking day, No more was heard the mistrelay, Of Nightingale perched high on tree: No longer to the thrushes song, Did hills and dales her notes prolong; The frog had stopped his sullen croak,—Alone was heard, the shrilly cry, Of Night bird wheeling it on high,—Or now and then from silent shade,—The but had gone to th' hollow oak,—Alone was heard, the shrilly cry, Of Night bird wheeling it on high,—Or now and then from silent shade,—The Whippoorwill's lone serenade;—When from his lair the Buccaneer, With cautious tread and listening ear, Sped forth to join the lawless crew, Who yielded him a leaders due.
The glancing of his eagle eye,
Show'd daring bold, and courage high, As peering round on either hand,
He scann'd the pathway to the strand. Embroider'd baldrie to his form,
Held comrade true in battle's storm,
And all prepared for closing strife,
In sheath he bore a dagger knife,
Arriving at the pebbled strand,
Where silent lay his ruffian band,
He pealed a bugle note so shrill,
The echo shot from hill to hill,
And soon an answer loud was heard,
That startled in his nest the bird,
And presently from out their den,
Were issuing forms of armed men.
Outlaws of every land and elime,
Were issuing forms of armed men.
Outlaws of every land and slime,
Were pouring forth in measured time;
And some with dark ferocious look,
Whom danger 'twere to madly brook.
Around their chief in deep phalanx,
The pirate erwe closed up their ranks;
And some with dark ferocious look,
Whom danger is not a strong defence,
And words of gentlest courtesy;
Informed them how with much ado,
He'd passed the lines of foemen through;
Couching in thicket wood by day,
Holding by night his dangerous way;

And listen to the dim and shout,
Certes would follow the cutting out.

Upon the bay a speck is seen
To skim along the wavelets green,
Now sinking down and now appearing,
Still onward was its course careering,
It seemed impelled by magic sway,
So silently it cut its way;
And ever as it onward flew,
Shot forth the spray in sparkling hue.
Nature was hushed,—the sighing breeze
Touch'd lightly on the draoping trees:—
Anxiety and care they wore.
Who group'd along that rocky shore;
But soon athwart the nightly haze,
Came forth a sound I came forth a blaze!
The sound it spoke of mortal strife,
of man engaged for death or life!
The blaze was that of petronel,
Its echoing shot they all could tell.
Oh how did every bosom burn,
Of matchless fight some news to learn!
Oh how did every stout heart crave,
To join the combat with the brave!
Not long were they in doubt suspended,
Full soon the anequal firsy was ended:
That ship which minutes few before
In quiet lay, was now in gore.
Another chief, another crew
Now spread its whitened sails to view;
The fight was desperately begun,
And counting odds, was nobly won.
The sun rose on that lonely bay,
And set again—but where are they!
