

ADDRESS OF THE CARRIER OF THE U. C. HERALD TO HIS CUSTOMERS. Kingston, January 2nd, 1832.

Old Father Time with varied reign, Has sped his annual round again. And ushered in our hearts to cheer, The circle of another year.

And when the milder Spring Shall o'er the earth its softness fling; When Summer's sultry sun shall pour Its parching heat the landscape o'er;

And when the Autumn's gloomy day When dews and frosts grow grey. Since last I wrote my circular, Moments have flown both near and far,

And been within our paper stated; Which every one, undoubtedly, distinctly knows, as well as we.

And therefore, rhyming pen in hand, I wish you all to understand, That no more than a brief survey, Shall be the order of the day.

Of what has hap'd in this country, And in those distant spots of the sea. I'll give you to your hearts content, Proceedings of our Parliament,

Which as it speaks the public will, Shall first engross my doggerel quill. Called earlier to meet together, In consequence of better weather;

Which is a thing of consequence, Where roads are shodding to all intents; The Lower House commencing their session,

The orphan for his father dead, The maiden for her lover fled, The wife her husband's "broken spear," The sister o'er her brother's bier.

And at that time, when all was gloom, Thy battles fought,—unleash'd thy hand! Thy chivalry veiled o'er in gloom!

Thy banner torn and soiled thy plume! Thy warmest life blood flowed in vain, To rend the Despot's caudering chain!

Within thy hapless Capital, The Muscovite holds his festival: The rude and lawless soldiery, Stalk through thy halls in riotous glee;

Thy hearth stones are smeared in clotted gore, And thy valorous sons are seen no more: Thy White Eagle droops the field of slain, And "order" sways o'er thy ramparts again.

And when the milder Spring Shall o'er the earth its softness fling; When Summer's sultry sun shall pour Its parching heat the landscape o'er;

And when the Autumn's gloomy day When dews and frosts grow grey. Since last I wrote my circular, Moments have flown both near and far,

And been within our paper stated; Which every one, undoubtedly, distinctly knows, as well as we.

At a meeting of the licensed Tavern-Keepers of the Town of Kingston, held at the House of Mr. James Meagher on Friday the 25th Nov. 1831.

The following resolutions were, among others agreed upon. That the laws prohibiting licensed Tavern-Keepers from recovering by law, debts contracted with them for spirituous liquors, are most unjust and injurious to their effects, and not adapted to the Province in the present state of its population and circumstances, and ought to be abolished.

That the great number of houses in which liquors are sold without license, are a public nuisance to the order and well disposed part of the community, and ruinous to the interests of the licensed Tavern-Keepers.

That a committee of Five licensed Tavern-Keepers and a Secretary (who shall gratuitously discharge the duties of his office) be elected to manage and conduct all matters necessary to effectuate the objects of this meeting.

That each and every licensed Tavern-keeper, who signs these resolutions pledges himself to give information to the Secretary against every person, who, without license, shall vend wine, or spirits without license, and that the Secretary shall immediately, upon receiving such information convene a meeting of the committee to take the necessary steps for the conviction of the offenders, that every information given to the proper officer for conducting the prosecution shall be considered as the act of the whole body of licensed Tavern-Keepers, and not the act of any particular individual.
