FATAL AND MELANCHOLY DEED.

This morning, (Thursday), at five o'clock, Capt. Markham, of the 58th regiment, was shot by Capt. Mucklejohn, paymaster of the 92d. The dispute which terminated so fatally, occurred last night in the mess-room, Fe-moy-Captain Markham was unattended by a friend, and there were five officers of the 92d on the ground, who all decamped when the unfortunate gentleman fell, leaving him a melancholy object to the gaze of the soldiery.

THE CHOLERA.

This disorder, since its first appearance in Liverpool and its vicinity, has not, we rejoice to say made much progress among our crowded population. Limited however, as its ravages have been, its presence has called forth a spirit of resistance and vigilance on the part of the medical men and sanitary authorities which is disgraceful to the lower classes as likely to be injurious—perhaps fatal, to the unfortunate victims of the pestilence.

DEBILITARY REMARKS UPON CHOLERA.

We shall not waste our time, and expose our ignorance in discussing whether the cholera be of atmospheric, volcanic, telluric, electric, galvanic, or magnetic origin; nor whether the disease be epidemical, epizootic, or contagious. As these are points upon which the learned differ to and to, we shall offer no opinion; for who shall decide when doctors disagree! It is more to our present purpose to urge the following facts upon the attention of our readers. It appears pretty generally admitted that the atmosphere and the disease are in some way connected, as cause and effect, whatever other influences may conspire to aggravate the symptoms.
