[Mr. Aylwin said, in Lord Sydenham's days.] He thought Mr. Wakefield had also brought forward a similar measure, during the administration of the hon. gentleman opposite.

Mr. Morry complained, that his name had been put upon the motion as seconder, without his consent being obtained.

Mr. COLVILLE said, he ought certainly to apologize for having done so, but the hon. gentleman had given his consent to be placed on the Committee so readily, that he (Mr. Colville) had thought be would have no objection to be the seconder of the motion. That Government were not prepared to uch for Sir Charles Metcalfe's impartiality .--Every office in this District, eleven or twelve, is filled by a Tory; and when a vacancy occurs Sir Charles appoints another Tory! The humbug cry of "impartiality," and "no party governnent," has answered its design of cheating the electors, and it is therefore changed for the more appropriate cry of an ultra Tory Government, a

And in cases of this nature it may be doubted whether an intelligent assessor would not access the value of the second that the contract of the this nature it may be doubted whether an intelligent assessor would not assess the property at its value for general purposes, rather than at its special value, arising, probably, from some whim of the owner, or some peculiar purpose of his. The Chronicle refers to the house built by Archdeacon Stuart, which has probably cost £5000, and would not rent for more than £70 or £80 a year; and to the case of a house in some good business stand, which would cost no more than the Archdeacon's, if so much, and yet would bring £200 or £300 a year. But the former case is the one we have supposed, in which an owner, Arendeacon's, there is a 1 "st additional value attached to the site. The "wher pays no more for the building, but he pays a monstrous sum more for the small spot of lan, on which it is built. Thus the intrinsic value of property is not determined solely by the cost of the buildings, but by the value of the land as well, and that is determined according to what the whole ings, but by the value of the land as vell, and that is determined according to what the whole will bring in, in other words, by the annual value. Although we think, then, that the annual value is a simpler, easier ground of taxation than the intrinsic, yet we do not conceive that the difference between them is so great as our contemporary appears to consider it; for in nine cases out of ten the intrinsic value is fixed by the annual value. As a general rule, property is bought at so many years' purchase—that is, the annual value governs the price, varied somewhat by the peculiar adaptation of the property to suit the purchaser's wants and wishes.

On Friday the Governor General came down to the Council and gave Her Majesty's assent to the Bill to amend the law relating to Still Licences—the Bill to continue the duty on agricultural produce imported from the United States,—and the Bill to vest in Trustees the confiscated estate of John Montgomery.

The Chronicle of Wednesday copies our article on the Corporation, and, in some comments thereon, intimates that our statement respecting the present taxes being in some cases one fourth of the rent, is "distorted." We have the best the present taxes being in some cases one fourth of the rent, is "distorted." We have the best reasons for knowing that it is not, for the fact is that the present taxes on one of our own houses equal one fourth of the rent. It is therefore no imaginary case that we describe, but one that we know and feel in our own pockets. But by present taxes we do not mean Corporation taxes on difference to the tax payer under what name the tax is levied, or to what body it is payable. In referring to the effect of trebled taxes, we were inaccurate, from not remembering that the other taxes would not be trebled along with the other taxes would not be trebled along with the other taxes would not be trebled along with the corporation tax, but in all other respects there was nothing "distorted" in our statements.

The Chronicle further says the fault is chiefly with the electors, in not choosing better men to manage the affairs of the town. It is: but, on the other hand, it must not be forgotten that the Corporation have cheated the electors in several things of high importance. For instance, in the example of the normal content of the corporation from care and some standing in the community, a man accustomed to judge on the value of property, and not afraid to tax the members of the Corporation at we cheated the electors in several things of high importance. For instance, in the example of the corporation from care and some standing in the community, a man accustomed to judge on the value of property, and not afraid to tax the members of the Corporation and the same rate as other people are taxed. In the month of January he published in the Guardian a replyto Mr. Eraper's speech on the University Bill.—He received a letter from Mr. Draper thanking him for the courtesy with which he had treated him; and about the same time, one from the Governor Graper 1. bim for the courtesy with which he had treated him; and about the same time, one from the Governor General's Secretary requesting his presence at Kingston, as he wished to receive his advicateoneerning the present state of affairs. Though his vanity was flattered at this, still he indulged it some unpleasant reflections upon his Excellency's probable position in thus sending for him; ind just before his departure for Kingston, he impured of one of the others of the College whether he had any idea to suggest relative to public matters. The individual's reply was, "that he had nothing further to say than that he believed it to be his Excellency's object to get him town to Kingston so as to enter into some compromise to receive his influence in bringing over the Methodist Church to support the government." Dr. R. declared that he thought such was the object of the Governor General and Mr. Draper; and he would therefore be on his guard. In the Toronto Examiner of October 30th, Mr. Ryerson toundly asserts,—"that the result of his investigations between his Excellency and the late Counsellors was announced to two individuals before he had seen his Excellency since the resignation of the Ministry;" and declars that decision to have been in accordance with his late political writings which were "as free as the air he breathes."—but with what degree of moral honesty or truth, my readers shall judge. The fact, however, soon which were "as free as the air he breathes," but with what degree of moral honesty or truth, my feaders shall judge. The fact, however, soon became apparent to all connected with the Institution, that a serious change had taken place is Mr. Ryerson's political views since his visit to a lingston. He was exuberant in his praises of Sin Charles, whose liberality he declared knew no bounds, and whose many amiable personal qualities rendered it impossible for him to be any other than one of the best of men. it became cur, sutly reported that the first of Victoria Coilege had been BRIBED to the Govern, sent interest by the promise of the office of Superint sudent of Education. In the mean time he received several communications from the government, which, together with his replies he read publicly to the students and some of the people in town, in the College Chapel. In the first letter, the Governor effers to the Rev. Egerten Ryerson the appointment of Assistant Superintendent of Education for Canada West, assigning as his reasons, the confidence which he placed in his abilities, the import, at services which he had already rendered the con. ENGRAVED PORTRAIT

Sir Charles T. Metcalfe, Bart.

THE undersigned would respectfully announce that he has entered into arrangements for publishing, by subscription, at an early day, a splendid MEZZOTINTO ENGRAVING of HIS EXCELLENCY THE GOVERNOR GENERAL, taken from Mr. Bradish's Portrait, recently painted, which has been pronounced by the most competent judges to be the best likeness of His Excellency ever executed. The engraving will be executed in the very best style of art, and printed upon a sheet of about 18 by 14 inches, and the greatest care will be taken to ensure perfect copies to the Subscribers.
