It was a calm, sunny day in the year 1750; the scene, a piece of forest land on the Northern neck of Virginia, contiguous to a noble stream of water. Implements of surveying were lying about, and several men idly reclining under the trees, betokened by their dress and appearance that they composed a party engaged in laying out the wild land of the then frontier of the Oid Dominion. These persons had apparently inst Dominion. These persons had apparently just finished their noontide meal, for the relics of the finished their montide meat, for the felics of the banquet were scattered around.

Apart from the group walked a young man, evidently superior to his companions, though there was nothing obtrusive in his air, which on the contrary was distinguished by affability. A certain dignity of aspect, however, accompanied him. Added to this, he was of a tall and compact frame and moved with the elastic tread of one according to contrart a carriage in the open air. accustomed to constant exercise in the open air. His countenance could not be said to be handsome. but it wore a look of decision and manliness not usually found in one so young—for apparently he was little over eighteen years of age. His hat had been cast off, as if for comfort, and he had paused with one foot advanced, in a natural and graceful attitude, at the moment that we have introduced him to the reader.

Suddenly there was a shriek, then another, then several in rapid succession. The voice was that of a woman, and seemed to proceed from the other side of a dense thicket. At the first scream the youth turned his head in the direction from whence the sound proceeded, but when it was repeated, he pushed aside the undergrowth which separated him from it and onickning his was repeated, he pushed aside the undergrowth which separated him from it, and quickening his footsteps as the cries succeeded each other with alarming rapidity, he soon dashed into an open space or "clearing," as the borderers even then called it, on the banks of the stream, in the centre of which a rude log cabin stood, whose well-pole poised over one end, and smoke curling from the chimney, gave signs of habitation. As the young man with a face flushed by haste, broke from the undergrowth. he saw his companious crowded undergrowth, he saw his companions crowded together on the bank of the river, while in their midst a woman from whom proceeded the shrieks, was visible, held back by two of the most athletic of the men, but still struggling violently for

It was the work of an instant to make his way The moment her eyes fell on him she exclaimed.

4 O, sir, you will do something for me. Make them release me—for the love of God! My boy my poor boy, is drowning, and they will not let me go !"

"It would be madness—she will jump into the river," said one of those who held her, as the frantic mother strove again to break from his grasp. The rapids would dash her to pieces in a moment."

The youth had scarcely waited for these words. His eye took in, at a single glance, the meaning of the sad group. He recollected the child of the woman, a bold little fellow of four years, whose handsome blue eyes and flaxen ringlets had made him a favorite with strangers, and filled his mother's heart with pride whenever she led his mother's heart with pride whenever she gazed on him. He had been accustomed to play, at will, in the little enclosure before the cabin; but this morning the gate having been accidentally left open, he had stolen out when his mother's back was turned—reached the edge of the bank and was in the act of looking over, when his parent's eye caught sight of him. The shriek which she uttered precipitated the catastrophe his parent's eye caught sight of him. The shriek which she uttered precipitated the catastrophe she feared; for the child, frightened at the cry, lost its balance, and fell headlong into the stream, which here went foaming and roaring along over innumerable rocks, constituting the most dangerous rapids known in that section of the country. Scream now followed scream in rapid succession as the agonised parent rushed to the bank. She arrived there simultaneously with the party whom we left reclining in the shade,—and who were scattered about within a few steps of the zeene of the accident. Fortunately it was that they were so near, else the mother would have they were so near, else the mother would have they were so near, else the mother would have plunged in after her child, and both been lost. Several of the men approached the brink, and were on the point of springing in after the child, when the sight of the sharp rocks crowding in the channel, the rush and whirl of the water, and the want of any knowledge where to look for the boy, deterred them, and they gave up the enterprise.

Not so with the youth we have introduced. His first work was to throw off his coat; his next to spring to the edge of the bank. Here he stood for a second running his eye rapidly over the scene below, and taking in with a glance the different currents and the most dangerous of the rocks, in order to shape his course by them when in the stream. He had scarcely formed his conin the stream. He had scarcely formed his conclusions, when his gaze rested on a white object in the water, that he knew at once to be the boy's dress, and while his companions aghast at his temerity, were prevented as much by consternation as by the awe with which he had inspired them, from interfering, he plunged headlong into the wild and roaring rapids.

"Thank God—he will save my child," gasped the woman, "see—there he is—O, my boy, my darling boy, how could I leave you!"

Every one had rushed to the brink of the precipice, and was now fo lowing, with eager eyes, cipice, and was now fo lowing, with eager eyes, the perilous progress of the youth, as the current bore bim coward, like a feather in the embrace of a hurricane. Now it seemed as if he would be dashed against a jutting rock over which the water flow in foam; and now a whiripool would deag him in from whose grant seeme. would drag bim in, from whose grasp escape would appear impossible. At times the current bore him under and he would be lost to sight; then, just as the spectators gave him up, he would re-appear, though far enough from where he vanished, still buffetting amid the vortex.—O't how that mother's straining eyes followed him in his perilous career—how her heart sunk when he went under—and with what a gush of joy she saw him emerge again from the waters, and flinging the waves aside with his athletic arms, struggled on in pursuit of her boy. But it seemed as if his generous efforts were to be of no avail, for though the current was bearing off the boy before his eyes, scarcely ten feet distant, he could not, despite his gigantic efforte, overtake the drowning child.

On flew the youth and the child; and it was

On flew the youth and the child; and it was miraculous how each escaped being dashed to pieces against the rocks. Twice the boy went out of sight, and a suppressed shriek escaped the mother's lips; but twice he re-appeared, and then, with hands wrnng wildly together, and breathless anxiety, she followed his progress, as his unresisting form was hurried onward with the current.

The youth now appeared to redeathle him.

The youth now appeared to redouble his exertions, for they were approaching the most dangerous part of the river, where the rapids contracting between the narrow shores, shot alcontracting between the narrow shores, shot almost perpendicularly down a declivity of fifteen feet. The rush of the waters at this spot was tremendous, and no one ventured to approach its vicinity, even in a cance, lest they should be sucked in. What, then, would be the youth's fate, ruless he speedily overtook the child! He seemed fully sensible of the increasing peril, and urged his way now through the foaming current with desperate strength.

Three several times he was on the point of Three several times he was on the point of grasping the child when the waters whirled the prize from him. The third effort was made just prize from him. The third effort was made just as they were about entering within the influence of the current above the fail, and when it failed the mother's heart sunk within her, and she greaned aloud, fully expecting to see the youth give up the task. But no! he only pressed forward the more eagerly, and as they breathlessly watched, they saw amid the boiling waters—as if bearing a chermed life—the form of the brave youth, following close to that of the boy. And now, like an arrow from the bow, pursuer and pursued shot to the brink of the precipies. An instant they hung there, distinctly visible amid the glassy waters, that seemed to pause on the edge of the descent. Every brain grew dizzy at the sight. But a shout of involuntary exultation buest from the spectators when they saw the boy held aloft by the right arm of the youth—shout, alas! that was suddenly checked by hor or when the rescreer and rescued vanished into the abyss below.

A moment—rather many moments elapsed before a word was spoken or a breath drawn.—Each of the group felt that to look into the mother's face was impossible. She herself had started eagerly forward and now stood on the bank, a few paces nearer the cataract, where she could command a view of its foot, gazing thither with fixed eyes, as if her all depended on what the next moment would reveal. Suddenly she gave a glad cry.

"There they are," she exclaimed, "see they are safe—Great God, I thank thee!" and for a moment wildly turning her face to heaven, she hurried with trembling steps along the side of the river in the direction of the fall.

Every eye followed hers, and sure enough there was the youth, still unharmed, and still before the safe of the river in the direction of the fall.

one hand he held aloft the child, and with the other he was making for the shore.

They ran, they shouted, they scarcely knew what they did, until they had reached his side, just as he had struggled to the bank. They drew him out almost exhausted. "God will reward you," said she, "as I cannot. He will do great things for you in retun for this day's work—and the blessing of thousands, besides mine, will attend you."

And it was so. For to the hero of that hour were subsequently confided the destinies of a mighty nation. But throughout his long career, what tended perhaps most to make him honored and respected beyond all men, was the self-sacrificing spirit, which, in the rescue of that mother's child, as in the more august events of his life, characterized our Washington.
