Charles Stuart, Esq., having returned from DANCING ACADEMY . England, whither he had gone on business prin-cipally connected with the much talked of Loan and Trust Company, has addressed the following letter to the Chronicle, giving therein an account of his Suward-ship.

Sir.—Having observed several paragraphs in the newspapers, relating to the Loan and Trust Company, and knowing the great interest which is felt by the public in the success of the Institution, I am induced to state the result of my late visit to England, the chief object of which was to promote it. I have much pleasure in ear was to promote it. I have much pleasure in saying, that during my residence in London, several persons of much influence were induced to take persons of much influence were induced to take an interest in it, among whom, I need only mention the names of Thomas Baring, Esq. M. P., one of the members for the City of London, and head of the house of Baring, Brothers, & Co., who has evinced a warm desire to advance it; and Richard Carr Glyn, E-g., of the firm of, Halifax and Mills: these gentlemen, with others have undertaken to get the Stock taken up in England, and to raise the necessary funds for the working of the Company. I am sure that it will be gratifying to the public of this Province, to know that it is in such good hands, in which I think it cam hardly fail of success. A portion of the Stock remains to be taken up in Canada. Sir Allan McNab, while in London, lent his able assistance to Mr. Atcheson and myself. I have every reason to believe that in the course of the ensuing spring the Company will be in full and successful operation. I make this plain statement of facts in order to correct erroneous impressions which have gone abroad among the public.

I am sir, your obedient serv't, CHARLES STUART. Kingston, 11th Dec., 1846.

Eye-witnesses have likened the appearance of Paris, in 1793, to a city inhabited by demons and harpies. Down the gutters of its grim streets crept incessantly a stream of human blood; through its numerous and gorgeous fountains played at intervals a torrent of delicious wine. There were civic honours for the malefactor, ignominies and cruelties for the good; there was luxury for the indigent, privation for the millionnaire. Never in the gloomiest reveries of Dante. naire. Never in the gloomiest reveries of Dante, had man conceived such spectacles of hideous and ineffable depravity as were witnessed each day in the public thoroughfares of the French capital. 'Death is an eternal sleep!' were the ominous words painted above the porch of every academy; the non-existence of a Deity was alone preached from the pulpits; and the population, maddened by an accumulation of blaspheation preached from the pulpits; and the population, maddened by an accumulation to blasphemy and crime, danced the Carmagnole about the gory planks of the guillotine, and shrieked with insane laughter in the performane of their deviluish jubilee. The Revolutionary tribunals were in full operation; the husky voice of the Fonquier Trinville, the public accuser, sent crowds the fallow creatives with ribad jest to death. of his fellow-creatures, with ribald jests to death; four hundred thousand victims choaked up the dungeons of those hellish demagogues; and, amidst the din of that earthly Pandemonium, the novel schemes of massacre while shipping their sherbet.—[Dolman's Magazine.

A MEXICAN HEROINE.-If the men of Mexico A MEXICAN REBOINE.—If the men of Mexico are cowards, the women are certainly heroines, especially if the following can be relied on as a fair sample of the courage of the sex. During the revolutionary war of France, and during the long and severe conflicts which she had with England, it was quite common for the heroic French ladies to assume male attire, and follow the fortunes of their husbands, or lovers in the the fortunes of their husbands, or lovers, in the battle field of their country. Historians inform us that during the hottest of the fight, the clear us that during the hottest of the fight, the clear silvery voice of the loving wife, or devoted maiden, might repeatedly be heard cheering the soldiers on to victory. Jean d'Arc, however, was the only member of this Amazonian band that claimed the privilege of commanding an army, and from her death until the present time, the fair sex have in general been satisfied to obtain conquests by the force of their charms, and not by means of gunpowder, lead, and cold steel.

The following article is from the pen of an officer in the United States army, who was himself in the battle of Monterey. He says:—

"One fact connected with the assault upon Monterey I have neglected to record. It is stated and generally believed, that a company of Lancers was commanded by a woman. Her ed and generally believed, that a company of Lancers was commanded by a woman. Her name is Dos Amades. Seized with a patriotic spirit, she unsexed herself, and dressed in a full suit of a Captain of Lancers, she desired to be led against the foe, and swore that she would never yield until the "Northern barbarians" were driven from her natal land, or until she had shed her last drop of blood in defence of her native country. Previous to our attack she was paraded before the troops, and greatly excited and augmented their courage. She harangued them, and desired to be posted at that spot where the first shet should fall, and where the thickest of the battle should wage. It is reported that on should wage. It is reported that on he led the charge of Lancers which al to some of our command—among proved fatal to some of our command—among the number, the lamented Field. There's an example of heroism worthy the days of old! It has remained for Mexico to produce a second Jean d'Arc, but not like her, successful. I would have given a great deal to have seen her ladyship."

A PERSEVERING BORE.--An empty-headed President of Bourdeaux ence called upon Mr. "Zounds!" exclaimed the latter to his eer-vant, 'why have you admitted that horrid bore! will not see him. Go and say that I am verry

"Ask him, then," resumed the persevering visitant, "whether I may just step into his room, and feel his pulse?"

"No!" was the enraged reply. "Tell him I am dying—I am dead."

"Blay, I not then go to his chamber to give him the holy water?"

"No!" was ejaculated still more loudly.—
"Tell him the devil has carried me off."

"Did they not leave their address before they went?" was the last enquiry of the President.

MAGNAMITY.—When the Emperor Vespasian commanded a Roman senator to give his voice against the interest of his country, and threatened him with immediate death if he spoke on the other side, the Roman, conscious that the attempt to serve a people was in his power, though the event were ever so uncertain, answered with a smile.

ENGLISH VESSELS UNDER FRENCH COLORS.

Lord Chesterfield being in Paris, was at a party with Voltaire, when the latter said to him—
"My Lord, which are the most beautiful—the English or the French ladies?"

"Really, I cannot tell," replied Chesterfield, I am not a good judge of painting."

Soon afterwards, Voltaire, happening to be conversing with an English woman high rouged, Chesterfied approached him and said—
"Sir, take care that you are not captivated."
"My Lord," replied Voltaire, "I have no fears of being taken by an English vessel carrying French colors."

A singing-master, while teaching his Pupile, was visited by a brother of the tuneful art. The visitor observing that the chorister pitched the tune vocally, said,

The old, the middle-aged and the young, all alike, are food for this common enemy of mankind. The white-haired patriarch, whose life of temperance has rendered his system impervious to the attacks of other ille, and whose good deeds prepared him for the enjoyment of life's ealm evening, finds consumption fastening its fangs upon his vitals, and tearing him from a world, ever bright to minds which look complacently on days well spent.
