which, considering the unusual expences that the institution has necessarily incurred, in its first year, your committee consider a very graitifying statement. In conclusion, your committee will be excused in expressing their satisfaction at the state of the Kingston Mechanic's lastitution at the close of its first and experimental year. Already it has a library of the consense of valuable Books; about as many specimens, &c. in the Museum—some of which are very rare—and 192 Coins—1 gold; 27 silver, and 164 copper. There are 20 or 30 Reviews and newspapers regularly fiken in for the Reading Room table; and the rooms are furnished with handsome and durable furniture. The institution, besides, is entirely out of debt; and having, it is to be hopped, obtained strengts and character, will be ready to start on the second year of its existence without incumbrance, and with animating prospects for the future.

FIRE .- On Thursday morning last, a litbrick house of Mr. John Collar, on Quarry street, caught fire from some shavings near a stove in the second story. The rooms being all lathed, ready for plastering, and the floors covered with shavings, the second and third stories were on fire almost in an instant,—the flames raging with the greatest jury and averaging with the greatest jury and third stories were on fire almost in an instant,—the flames raging with the greatest tury, and apparently uncontrollable. Fortunately, the engines of the Kingston Volunteer Fire Company, and those of the military departments, were very soon on spot, and being constantly supplied with water by the active exertions of the carters, and from two wells in rear of the burning house, they were able to extrangish the fire house administratrix, seized by virtue of an Execution issued out of His Majesty's Court of King's Bench at the suit of Willette Casey, viz.

CARD.

OHN COLLAR desires to embrace the earliest opportunity of conveying some token of gratitude to his fellow Townsmen, in general; the Kingston Volunteer Fire Company; the Military in general; and the Carters of the Town, for the extraordinary exertions, in which under an all-merciful Providence, they were so eminently instrumental in preserving his property from total destruction by fire, on Thursday last.

To Messrs Scanlan, Jackson, Truax, and Muckleston, and all others of his Townsmen, who have since so generously contributed to repair his loss, he also feels peculiarly grateful, so much so, indeed, that language is altogether inadequate to express his feelings. As a rumour is affoat, imputing the origin of the fire to negligence on the part of the workmen, who have suffered considerably by the loss of their Tools, he thinks it his duty to give it as his opicion that the calamity was parely accidental.
