Mr. Thibodo's letters in the Spectator fully explain this apparent paradox-for, it thereby plainly appears that, the very few radicals, which happen to be among us, formed a deeply laid scheme—took advantage of its being a volunteer corps—and agreed together, or, to go forward, and be the first to give in gr. their names, so as to constitute a majority in the election of officers!

However, they did not make much of their effort; as out of the three officers, two their effort; as out of the three officers, two their effort; as out of the three officers, two their effort; as out of the three officers, two their effort; as out of the three officers, two their effort; as out of the three officers, two their effort; as was observed.

For there corruption, broad and strong, has fixed its seat: there the war of fierce and bitter party strife is hotly maintained; and there slumbers the volcano of clashing, warring interests, which will yet shake the republic to its base. If our reformers want to improve our Government, we would advise them to begin with themselves. Let every man reform himself, and then he will be better prepared to correct the errors of the State.

By the minutes of the meeting lately held at Toronto, we are pleased to observe the Layourable progress of the plan for establements.

We have a laways fettidishes posed to believe that the gentlement with whom the plan originated intended solely he good of the Province—and our opinions is now confirmed by the assurance we have received, that the Share Holders are from all classes of the community, without distinction of religious or political creed. This we are gratified to observe, as it augurs well for the prosperity of the Colony, when we see all parties emulating each other in a common strife for the general good, as is the case with the supporters of this Institution.
