I would remark, en passant, that I have been an icipating a kitle, having seen only the first number of "The Milesians" (which is merely introductory) in a finished state. But from the promise which it holds forth, together with the view which the author has given of his entire plan, I doubt not that the highest expectations will be realized. And I feel certain that the public generally, and Irishmen in particular, will aid him in the completion of his undertaking. I expect to see his subscription list extended with a chain of names that would reach (as Daniel O'Connell says.) "from the Giant's Causeway to Cape Clear." In fine, dear reader, become a subscriber for "The Milesians" "in less than no time," or you will be eternally stigmatized as a barbarian.

LATEST NEWS.

I would remark, en passant, that I have been an itiopating in the 3d of August, growing as usual, out of the dissensions of the orangemen and the reformers. Between twenty and thirty thousand persons were assembled, many armed with bludgeons, knives, pikes, stones, &c. Two companies of the 99th regiment, and the city horse and foot police were summoned, and succeeded at length in quelling the disturbance, but not until several persons were severely wounded.— Another account says the assemblage could not be short of sixty thousand.

The popularity of Lord Mulgrave was still increasing.

Pensions are granted to the relatives of the persons who were killed by the fire intended for the King. It appears that Louis Philippe is apprehensive of some fresh attempts being made by the deposed monarch to return to France, and is taking great precaution against them.

The accounts from Spain present the same scenes of butchery as have been witnessed so long, without any thing taking place to decide the controversy.
