The reports in the Montreal papers, that Mr. Papineau and his political friends had argued their case before His Excellency Lord Gosford on their late visit to Quebec, Lord Gosford en their late visit to Quebec, are altogether unfounded. The general understanding is, that those gentlemen sought to involve His Excellency, but that he was proof against the intrigue, and that all explanation of his instructions was decidedly refused, except through the regular course of business with the Legislature.—Nothing whatever turned up on the subject, but it is said, in an incidental conversation, one of the Commissioners declared it as his individual opinion, that he was firmly opposed to the abolition or election of the second branches, on the former being declared by the patriotic deputy as soon to be generally adopted, under the "progres" which is going on, as it is conceived by some.—[Quebec Gazette, 12th.
