It will be remembered that that was a question revry much debated in this House, and that the Right Honorable Baronet opposit (Sir R, Peel) whom I will take this opportantity of saying I am most rejoiced to see here this night—[hear?]—proposed a qualification to differing materially from the average of those qualifications which he found in local acts, giving at the same time the alternative, that there should be a certain amount of rating and a certain amount of property in some boroughs, and a supe-in the total council and the more of law. the alternative, that there should be a certain amount of rating and a certain amount of property in some boroughs, and a superior degree of rating and a higher amount of property in others. I think that his proposition was not liable to more objection than any qualification is liable to. I stated in the House at the time, and my friends arround me stated the grounds on which we count has appeared in the Montreal Count in the House at the time, and my friends around me stated the grounds on which we thought it better that no qualification should be required, and the principle for which we then contended, is one which I think must sooner or later be adopted by the Legislature in respect to elections of this kind, and which is so sound in itself, that it may be left to work its way. If you leave it to the elector to choose a person of sufficient abilities and character, you leave it to him also to choose a person of sufficient abilities and character supply the place of property. But at the same time 1 am quite aware of the truth of what the Right Hon. Baronet stated at the time, that qualification has been in a great many Acts of Parkament the rule laid down, and that there are still a great many persons who think that some qualification ought to be taken.
