It cannot be forgotten, that wealth, that univerat cannot be lorgotten, that weath, that universal desideratum, must in a new country like Upper Canada, spring chiefly, if not entirely, from the soil. Nature has wisely ordered that the inherent principle of self preservation, which excites any one man to use exertion for his own support, should by degrees extend its beneficial influence to the wall being of others, until the whole family of the well being of others, until the whole family of mankind are included within the circle of mutual and useful operation: thus the surplus with which

A great writer says: "No equal capital puts into motion a greater qu ntily of projuctive labor than that of the Farmer. Not only his laboring servants, but his laboring cattle are productive laborers. In Agriculture too, Nature labors along with man; and though her labor costs no expense, it produces its value as well as that of the most expensive workman. No equal quantity of proexpensive workman. No equal quantity of productive labor employed in manufactures, can ever occasion so great a re-production. In these Nature does nothing,—man does all, and the re-production must always be in proportion to the strength of the agents that occasion it. The capital employed in Agriculture, therefore, not only puts into motion a greater quantity of productive labor than any equal capital employed in manufactures, but in proportion to the quantity of productive labor which it employs, it adds a much greater value to the annual produce of the land and the labor of the country, to the real whilst had revenue of its inha-

In the soil of Upper Canada lies the germ of future national greatness and prosperity; and it wants but that the value of her natural resources should be properly appreciated, so that they may be used with success, to provide in the country productive labor sufficient to employ nearly a thousand times the number of its present population. -How much such a state of things would add to individual property and the revenue of the country, may be imagined.

Agriculture has been beautifully observed to be "the base, Commerce the shaft, and Manufactures the capital." "As soon as the first is firmly laid, the progress of the country will be certain and irresistible, until the last finishings shall be given to the work, and Upper Canada stand a pillar of durability and wealth amongst the nations of the
