GENTLEMEN:

When the conduct of a Representative of the goole is impugned, it follows, of course, that the freeholders who gave such Representative their mapport are obliged to share with him the odium thus attached to his public character. It is this consideration alone that now induces me to address you.

My conduct during the last session has been, and still is, severely animadverted upon, by persus who are either ignorant of the facts connected with the subject, or who are, from political feeling or some less worthy motive, inclined to malign any character as one of your Representatives, and this end, are circulating reports which, if true, would justly bring me into contempt with every long the House of Assembly upon the whole charge has done on the very day of the accident.—[Chronicle.]

The opponents of church rates are not content, it seems, with petitioning against them; they now refuse to pay them, in many places, and the church-wardens are forced to distrain and sell, whereat a loud cry of oppression is raised.

The commotion excited by the affair of the Vixen, appears to have died away. Russia is understood to have given up her exclusive commercial advantages, under the existing tariff treaty with the Porte, for the purpose of joining the other powers in a general tariff; and this concession is said to have been purchased by Lord Durham, at the price of a stipulation that nothing more shall be done by England about the Vixen business.

FRANCE.

Ministerial changes were spoken of, at the latest date, March 29th, and had been a leading topic of rumour and conjecture for some time, but nothing definite seems to have taken place. The marriage of the Duke of Orleans, with the Princess Helena of Mecklenburgh, is all but officially announced. The contract was to be signed on the 25th, according to the Courrier Francaira, and Tempe announces preparations at the Tuileries for the reception and accommodation of the bride-General Damremont, the new commander in chief at Algiers, had gone to Toulon, to hasten the preparations for the expedition signing the contantine.

The condition of the silk-workmen at Lyons was still very distressing, and caused much anxiety to the government. A subscription for their relief had been opened in Paris, which in two days amounted to 12,700 france.

Marshal Clausel is reported to have declared, in his place in the Chamber of Deputies, that an offer had been made him, to negociate the abundonment of Algiers by the French, for the sum of 100 millions of france, and 5 millions for himself, and the Gazette de France very sagely saks whether this offer was not made by the American republic, "which has so long been coveting a little corner of territory in Africa."

The defeat of the British auxilaries under General Evans, has been followed by a similar disaster to Espartero, who, having advanced some leagues beyond Bilboz, was met, on the 21st of March, by the main body of the Carlists, commanded by the Infante Don Sebastian, and compelled to retrograde with some loss—which, of course, is magnified by the Carlist letter-writers. Saatsfield had also met with a check, near the frontier of Guipuzcoa; and to complete the tale of disaster, Irribarren had also been forced to retreat on Pampeluna. Thus the combined movement seems to have been completely frustrated, at every point. SPAIN.

The government appears, however, to have been successful in raising money, for a remittance of seven hundred and fifty thousand francs reached Bayonne, on the 25th of March, for the use of the army, being the third within a month, and the
