On more than one occasion principles were put to a severe test—and on he proved both his sincerity and integrity.

Since the preceding was written, we learn from the N. York papers received this morning, that Govto his political duties, he might easily have secured to himself executive favor and patronage—but his principles admitted of no compromise and no conprinciples admitted of no compromise and no con-sideration of private interest could induce him to lepart from them.

During the last year and a half of his residence During the last year and a half of his residence in the Province, as he had retired from public life, he had also quitted the arena of politics. He never meddled with the political contests of the day any farther than occasionally to express his private opinions, and carefully avoided any connexion with the various political associations formed during that period.

While thus pursuing the quiet and "even tenour of his way," and while successfully discharging the duties of his profession of which he was the brightest ornament, he was suddenly required by the late Lt. Governor to leave the Province! such conduct on the part of the executive needs ch conduct on the part of the executive need no comment—and it does not come within my preent purpose to dwell upon a procedure, which refleets so little credit upon its author, and upon the administration of which he was the head.

With these facts before you, it is a ground of ast and serious complaint, that Mr. Bidwell has just and serious complaint, that Mr. Bidwell has often been held up by you to public censure and reproach, and his name mentioned as being either identified in some way with the follies and crimes of Mackenzie and his partizans in their insurrectionary movements, or as having been instrumental in bringing them about, and more especially as it has all along been known to you as well as to other conductors of public journals, that no such charges have been prefered against him by any functionary connected with the government, and that it has never been pretended that any grounds for any such charges have ever existed.

Whether you possess a sufficient degree of mag-

Whether you possess a sufficient degree of magnanimity to give this an insertion in your paper remains to be seen, whether you do or noi, is to me a matter of little moment. If however you should, I have only one favor to ask, and that is, that you will confine your strictures on it to matters of fact, and that you will spare yourself the trouble of erecting an ideal edifice in order that you may have an opportunity to display your dexterity and valour in natting it down again.
