juries were not allowed to pursue their own honest and upright course; he was led to these remarks by his having seen in the Palladium as for a libel upon you, gentlemen of the jury, and upon the learned Judge who presided upon the Bench as ever fell from the pen of any man. The learned gentleman then read the editorial remarks upon the case of Hunter, and concluded by observing that the object was to hold over their heads the rod of Mr. Fotherhill if they dared to acquit, and more prisoners. Treason, he observed, is an act of the mind, compassing the death of the Queen; and is an act of the mind, and who can judge of the errors of the mind but the Great Being to whom the secrets of all hearts are revealed. In judging of the actions of Dr. Morrison you are called upon to judge with the same christian charity, that you would wish others to judge of your own, not to judge him by the offences of others with whom he may to a certain extent have associated himself in the Political Union, Mackenzie is said to have been a great enemy to the Government, he has been a greater enemy to Dr. Morrison. He is said to have been a great enemy to the loyal inhabitants of this Province; he has been a greater enemy to the reformers. At the last election every candidate at the hustings declared himself a reformer, because they were aware that unless they made that declaration they had no chance of being elected.

retained; a proof that the great majority of the Province are reformers. The learned counsel here entered into a long definition of the law of Treason, and read many extracts from the trials of Thelwell, Hardy, and others, shewing the great extent to which those persons had gone, and which the juries had pronounced not to be Treason by their verdicts. Sir Wm. Molesworth he said, had prayed to God for the success of the Canadians, against the British Troops. Mr. Hume had talked about the baneful domination of the "mother country, even Mr. Gurnett had been casting his mind's eye about for another state of political existence. Yet this was not Treason for they had never been prosecuted. This declaration had been published every since the month of July; if it was Treason now it was Treason as soon as the pen was put to paper. Why was he not prosecuted

8 or 9 months since? Why gentlemen of the jury the Attorney General tells you why he was not prosecuted, he tells you that you would have acquitted him if he had; but now in the time of trouble and excitement you will find him guilty.—Dr. Morrison's conduct at Doel's brewery was a proof that he had no Treason in his composition; the whole course of his peaceful life, the rectitude of his moral conduct, his religious habits, all give the lie to this charge. We are his friends.

his ordinary business, attending his patients, taking his tea quietly with his family, and an hour afterwards we are told that he is cocking his pistols and shooting people on Yonge Street—believe it not, men do not change and become devils in a moment. After the punishment of Lount and Matthews, can it be believed that he would have been here this day had he not been conscious of his own innocence, he would not have appeared before this tribunal when he could have so easily left this Province. If you punish this man where are you to stop, every man who signed that declaration is equally guilty, and each will hold his life by the same precarious tenor, the tender mercies of the Attorney General. Gentlemen, if Dr. Morrison is a Traitor, how much greater Traitor must Sir F. B. Head be, listen to his own confession in his Address to the Houses of the Provincial Parliament

"I allowed him to say what he chose, do what he chose, I even allowed him to drill, to assemble with loaded fire arms, and make deliberate preparation for revolt." Why was not this man prosecuted? Had Dr. Morrison signed that paper I would not have undertaken to have defended him. The learned Counsel after thanking the Jury for their attention, called

Edward Perry, who on being sworn—said that he called at Dr. Morrison's on the evening of the 4th December a few minutes before 7 o'clock, on his way to the George Street Chapel—he found Dr. Morrison at tea with his family—he left his wife and returned a few minutes before 9 o'clock, saw nothing unusual in his appearance.

Mrs. Isabella Perry sworn—Stopped at Dr. Morrison's until her husband's return—Dr. Morrison remained at home until a few minutes before her husband's return—was in the office several times and might have gone out, was not absent from the room but for a few minutes, 10 or 15 at most—heard of the threatened attack on the town from Mr. Patrick who had returned from his office and said that he received his information from Colonel Fitzgibbon.

Edward Wright sworn—Saw Dr. Morrison on the evening of the 4th of December, felt unwell and went for the purpose of being bled—went into the room on the right hand side, it was ten minutes to 7 o'clock—had heard that the rebels had assembled at Montgomery's tavern—told Dr. Morrison of the rumour, he said he wondered that enlightened people could take such a step—called again a few minutes before 9 o'clock and saw the Doctor then at home—returned home and went to bed, was awake about one o'clock, the alarm bell was then ringing, got up and went to the door, saw Mr. Lawrence there on horseback who was much asated, said he had come into town by crossing Boulton's fields, and not all the way by Yonge Street road.

By Attorney General—Was himself rather frightened—heard that the rebels were assembled at Montgomery's tavern, mentioned that to Dr. Morrison—did not know what they were coming for, did not give that a thought.

By Mr. Boulton—Called at Dr. Morrison's the

James Bridgeland sworn—Called on Dr. Morrison on the evening of the 4th of December at a quarter before 9 o'clock—saw nothing particular in his demeanour.

Hugh Main sworn—was at Dr. Morrison's about 9 o'clock on the evening of the 4th of December at the Tailor's meeting till about 9 o'clock called for the Doctor to visit Mrs. Dunn in Church street, he saw no one but Dr. Morrison, he was there again about an hour after for Mrs. Dunn's medicine after he had seen her.

he was in King Street going Westward, stopped and spoke to him and then walked up Yonge street with him as far as Newgate Street, when he left Dr. Morrison and walked on in company with Mr. Mills as far as Elmley's gate, on returning to Mills's house it was then half-past ten—did not see Dr. Morrison after I left him at the corner of Newgate Street.

Mrs. Hannah Doel sworn—Is a patient of Dr. Morrison's, remembers the 4th December last, remembers his calling about a quarter past nine o'clock in the evening, staid about three minutes, he called again about a quarter past 11 o'clock.

the clock again about a quarter past 11, remembering the time well, she looked at the clock.
